Development (1983) Philip Cooke, 2016-09-19 First published in 1983 this book attempts to unify two bodies of theory which had become severely disjointed Theories of the planning process had become detached from those of the urban and regional processes which are the subject of planning intervention The author argues that major weaknesses of planning intervention in cities and regions have resulted from this split and shows how it is possible to develop an integrated theory of the relationship between planning and spatial development The mechanism which helps to unify the two fields is the division of labour This poses problems for the planning system as its spatial requirements change but it depends upon the state planning framework in order to overcome those obstacles hindering its capacity for spatial reorganisation This book offers a thorough analysis of these obstacles and requirements by references to contemporaneous theoretical advances in the study of the development process the state especially at sub national level and the labour market It is argued that the way capital makes use of urban and regional space can be explained by using the theoretical framework which is developed and on this basis point to certain innovative ways in which the processes underlying urban and regional de industrialisation may be countered Clustering Dynamics and the Location of High-Tech-Firms Mario A. Change and Industrial Revolution John Langton, 1979-12-20 The economic changes of the industrial revolution came to different parts of England at different times By examining the geography of these changes this book shows how the pattern of production in an important coalfield changed as it became part of the regional economic system developing around the port of Liverpool In the first part of the book the author develops a model for studying the geography of economic change by combining the economic location theory of August Losch with concepts from systems theory He concludes that normative theories possess great value in allowing an ordered description of the process of growth if not an explanation of it The theoretical model allows the author to analyse the complex process of change in the coalfield The combination of theoretical enquiry and detailed archival work provides a thorough account of the transformation of an important industry In doing so the book casts considerable light on the process of regional economic development in the English industrial revolution

Management and Regional Science for Economic Development Manas Chatterji, 2012-12-06 The greatest challenge facing mankind today is the immense disparity in the levels of income among people in different parts of the globe The growth rate of income of the poor countries is consistently far below the rate of the advanced industrialized nations Due to low income and a high propensity to consume there is very little left in these countries for investment A major portion of the resources available is devoted to military expenditures This continual decline in the standard of living coupled with poverty and unemployment will lead to social and political upheaval in these countries which affects developed countries Because of high capacity and low population growth the market of the developed countries is already saturated To maintain the high standard of living in the developed countries it is necessary to have a strong and stable developing world It is gratifying to see that both groups of countries see the need for peaceful economic growth however the amount of cooperation between countries and the material help from the developed countries are far from satisfactory The economic and social scientists have investigated the best way to achieve the transformation from a poverty ridden condition to a decent existence Their studies have proceeded in two different directions One is a more descriptive historical analysis and the other is theoretical model building Although these studies have achieved a relatively high level of perfection one significant factor is sometimes missing

History of Regional Science and the Regional Science Association International Walter Isard,2012-12-06 It is difficult if not impossible to establish the point of time at which a new field of study starts to emerge While the date of formal organization of a society associated with the field can be precisely stated such timing says little about when and where the seeds for a field's development were planted Also such timing says little about the essential why for the development of a field and provides little understanding of the path that it traced It is clear that the emergence of the field of regional science like many other fields was dependent on a particular setting as well as the pattern of events and interaction of diverse personalities who became involved As best I can I shall attempt in this Part I of the History to unravel the where when and why questions in the development of Regional Science and the Regional Science Association International Further in the last section of this essay I shall briefly point up some potentialities for analytical advances in the field of regional science Also I shall note the opportunity for leadership by regional scientists in attacking global and regional development problems thereby to help formulate relevant policy In this way I hope to expose the potential for fruitful research by young scholars interested in entering the field
