

MS Genes: Genetic Factors Behind Multiple Sclerosis

Root Causes of MS

The onset of MS is believed to be linked to immune system alterations and the breakdown of the brain's protective barrier. These changes lead to the destruction of the myelin sheath around nerve fibers and subsequent loss of nerve fibers, leading to problems with movement, sensations, and cognitive function.

Immune System Activation

In MS patients, lab tests showed increased Th17 in the blood and the central nervous system. Th17 cells produce inflammatory cytokines (mainly IL17). The increase in inflammatory cytokines opens up the blood-brain barrier, allowing even more inflammatory cells into the brain.

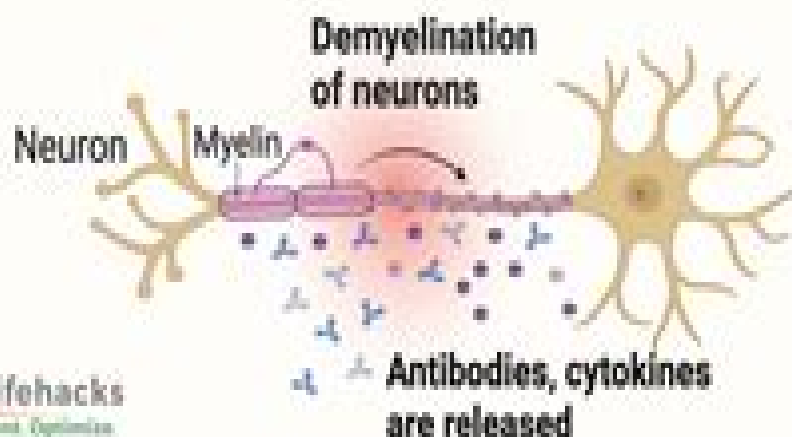

MS Genetic Variants

Twin studies suggest the heritability of MS is 30-35%.

HLA-DRB1*1501: One of the first and strongest genetic links to MS (6x increased risk) that researchers have found.

IL2RA: receptor for interleukin-2. "IL2RA is the target of the MS-approved drug daclizumab."

IL7R gene: "Interleukin 7 receptor α -chain is crucial for the development and maintenance of T cells and is genetically associated with autoimmune disorders including multiple sclerosis (MS)"
