Globalization, Communication and Transnational Civil Society Sandra Braman, 1996 Contemporary theorising about globalisation processes has only recently come to acknowledge the crucial role of media systems a theme long familiar to researchers within communications Thus this volume situates media forms and processes as central foci of globalisation processes and gives communications researchers a chance to respond to the theories often devised by those without any intimate involvement in communications theory or practice The responses are loud and varied The first half of the book clusters theoretical critiques and embellishments of globalisation theory as well as offers some alternative theoretical models for examining current communications and cultural practices in the unfolding new world system Considerable attention is paid to unpacking notions of a transnational public sphere global civil society and solidarity and examining the role that media play in structuring both potentially hegemonic practices as well as alternative practices The second half clusters a variety of case studies exploring different facets of the dynamics of globalisation Three chapters focus on specific media forms such as the examination of music language and news A last chapter explores the notion of solidarity in a different way how international organisations such as Amnesty can try to influence the news agenda to mobilise transnational public sympathy for an oppressed group specifically street children in Brazil The introduction and conclusion each written by one of the editors provide contextualisation and development of the debates and focus on further issues for theoretical development and has blossomed from an arcane tool used primarily by academics and government researchers into a worldwide mass communications medium that has rapidly become the backbone of all communications and financial transactions within society and the new global economy. No previous telecommunications advance, not the telephone, the television, cable television, the VCR, the fax, or even the cellular telephone, is having more cultural and political impact on the global media landscape than the Internet. It has not just penetrated public consciousness but has secured widespread public adoption. The potential for a rebirth of democracy and citizen participation in global governance issues is enormous. It is clear that communications will continue to play a comprehensive and critical role in the expansion of the global economy and the global and the world community. The interdependency of nations that is driving globalization is unquestionably economic, but the social and political integration and interdependence are also very real. Interdisciplinary understanding of the connections between social and political needs and concerns and mechanisms for harmonizing such differences must be a priority for governments and institutions. This will require a new global awareness of world affairs by citizens everywhere.

Victoria Welby and the Science of Signs Susan Petrilli, 2017-09-08. Victoria Welby (1837-1912) dedicated her research to the relationship between signs and values. She exchanged ideas with important exponents of the language and sign sciences such as Charles S. Peirce and Charles S. Ogden. She examined themes she believed crucially important both in the use of signs and in reflection on signs. But Welby's research can also be understood in ideal dialogue with authors she could never have met in real life such as Mikhail Bakhtin, Susanne Langer, and Genevieve Vaughan. Welby contends that signifying cannot be constrained to any one system, type of sign, language, field of discourse, or area of experience. On the contrary, it is ever more developed, enhanced, and rigorous the more it develops across different fields, disciplines, and areas of experience. For example, to understand meaning, Welby evidences the advantage of translating it into another word, even from the same language, or resorting to metaphor to express what would otherwise be difficult to conceive. Welby aims for full awareness of the expressive potential of signifying resources Her reflections make an important contribution to problems connected with communication expression interpretation translation and creativity
