

Gender Knowledge and Gender Expertise: The Implementation of Gender Mainstreaming in Swedish State Agencies

Lenita Freidenvall*

Through an analysis of the Swedish government development program for gender mainstreaming in state agencies—the JIM (Jämställdhet i myndigheter) program—this article analyzes how gender equality is constructed (gender knowledge) and what role specialized knowledge (gender expertise) has in policy implementation. The article claims that even in best-case scenarios, such as Sweden, where intensive efforts to integrate a gender perspective have been undertaken, gender knowledge is based on visions and strategies that do not question prevailing policy paradigms. However, cross-cutting and intersectional conceptualizations of gender equality have created epistemic space for transformative interventions on the part of gender experts.

Introduction

In recent years, the concepts of gender knowledge and gender expertise, representing two distinct but interlinked bodies of literature, have been increasingly applied in policy research. In relation to the first body of literature—on gender knowledge—it has been noted that knowledge and knowledge production in policy making play a key role, as this focus offers a shift beyond traditional impact assessment of policies on gender relations by investigating the processes of gendered knowledge production and their capacity to structure the policy formation discourses (Young and Scherrer 2013). With the help of the concept of gender knowledge, implicit and explicit gender assumptions in policies may be revealed and the disjointedness between the commitment to gender equality at the policy level and actual policy making may be explained (ibid.).

Gender And Expertise:

Gender Expertise in Public Policy S. Hoard, 2015-04-07 Through a selection of in depth interviews a survey of experts working with the European Union and United Nations and Qualitative Comparative Analysis of policy debates this text rethinks our understanding of gender expertise and the circumstances that lead to expert success in public policy The Politics of Feminist Knowledge Transfer María Bustelo, Lucy Ferguson, Maxime Forest, 2019-04-13 The Politics of Feminist Knowledge Transfer draws together analytical work on gender training and gender expertise Its chapters critically reflect on the politics of feminist knowledge transfer understood as an inherently political dynamic and contested process the overall aim of which is to transform gendered power relations in pursuit of more equal societies workplaces and policies At its core the work explores the relationship between gender expertise gender training and broader processes of feminist transformation arising from knowledge transfer activities Examining these in a reflective way the book brings a primarily practice based debate into the academic arena With contributions from authors of diverse backgrounds including academics practitioners and representatives of gender training institutions the editors combine a focus on gender expertise and gender training with more theory focused chapters Negotiating Gender Expertise in Environment and Development Bernadette P. Resurrección, Rebecca Elmhirst, 2020-11-26 This book casts a light on the daily struggles and achievements of gender experts working in environment and development organisations where they are charged with advancing gender equality and social equity and aligning this with visions of sustainable development Developed through a series of conversations convened by the book's editors with leading practitioners from research advocacy and donor organisations this text explores the ways gender professionals specialists and experts researchers organizational focal points deal with personal power laden realities associated with navigating gender in everyday practice In turn wider questions of epistemology and hierarchies of situated knowledges are examined where gender analysis is brought into fields defined as largely techno scientific positivist and managerialist Drawing on insights from feminist political ecology and feminist science technology and society studies the authors and their collaborators reveal and reflect upon strategies that serve to mute epistemological boundaries and enable small changes to be carved out that on occasions open up promising and alternative pathways for an equitable future This book will be of great relevance to scholars and practitioners with an interest in environment and development science and technology and gender and women's studies more broadly The Open Access version of this book available at <https://www.taylorfrancis.com/books/e/9781351175180> has been made available under a Creative Commons Attribution Non Commercial No Derivatives 4.0 license Gender and Expertise Maureen McNeil, 1987 Gendering Policy Through Expertise Season Ashley Hoard, 2012 During the past two decades several organizations at the transnational national and local levels have committed to promoting women's rights and gender equality through various strategies such as gender mainstreaming Despite an increase in the prevalence of gender experts in the policy process the impact of gender expertise on public policy is not fully understood Feminist research has found that gender experts can be important to feminist policy success however we have little knowledge regarding how gender expertise is important and the factors which lead to successful adoption of gender expertise in public policy Feminist and non feminist research posits several factors that could potentially impact gender expert policy success However what constitutes gender expertise in public policy remains largely unclear In this dissertation I examine the factors that lead to gender expert recommendations being incorporated into formally adopted policy through a sequential mixed methods design utilizing interviews survey analysis and Crisp set Qualitative Comparative Analysis to sort through these factors and identify whether any factors are necessary or sufficient to policy success I develop a conceptualization of gender expertise and operationalize the concept by looking at individual credentials training or prior experience I heed the call for greater comparison in gender research by utilizing gender experts across the globe to develop insights into the shared factors that bolster gender expert success in public policy these factors are further tested with Qualitative Comparative Analysis of policy debates in Western postindustrial democracies I find that high level political support is a sufficient condition for gender expert policy success however it is also evident that it is not the only path to success for gender experts In the absence of high level political support gender experts can still achieve policy success if a women s policy agency advocates their recommendations and the issue is high on the women s movement agenda I argue that future research examining gender expertise needs to be more broadly comparative and examine whether and how the relative importance of these factors change depending on the countries policy sectors or regions being examined

Gender, Expertise and Information Technology Marja

Vehviläinen,1997 Abstract This book explores the interwoven construction of gender expertise and information technology by starting from three positions of information systems development in Finland male computing pioneers autobiographical accounts women developers oral histories and an office workers study circle with related interviews and fourthly from the codes of ethics of international computing professionals associations ACM and IFIP By applying Dorothy Smith s theory of conceptual practices of power information technology is understood as textuality in which texts e g programs professional journals and electronic messages are produced and interpreted through people s particular practices and by using particular knowledges of information technology Both practices and knowledges the expertise of information technology are organized within materially based social relations Gender intertwines with information technology through social practices Gender is studied on the level of social often textually mediated relations in terms of gendering hierarchies and divisions of labour but also inspired by Donna Haraway at the level of subjectivity in terms of definitions of information technology made by subjects The second major aim of this work is to participate in the development of methodologies on gender and technology research The study pays attention to persistently male tendencies of information technology but it looks for spaces available for women as well The computing professions inherited strict gender hierarchies from the punched card systems of the 1950s and those were strengthened by fraternities of former army acquaintances in everyday practices of systems development in public worlds of professional journals and associations as well as within images of identity In this setting the view of male experts and managers gained a status of objective truth In the 1970s and 1980s the ideas of flexible management and work design made space for participatory approaches towards systems design At the same time large numbers of women entered information technology professions in Finland Yet that view of objective truth has not been thoroughly challenged and there has been little room for textualities developed from women s or any other particular groups standpoints within information technology expertise People such as office workers can develop technologies based on their everyday life situations and this is a real opportunity for challenging both the gendering and the expertise of technology However the work done in particular settings does not translate to publicly available textuality

Gender Experts and Gender Expertise ,2015 Seeing Nature Through Gender Virginia Scharff,2003 Environmental history has traditionally told the story of Man and Nature Scholars have too frequently overlooked the ways in which their predominantly male subjects have themselves been shaped by gender Seeing Nature through Gender here reintroduces gender as a meaningful category of analysis for environmental history showing how women s actions desires and choices have shaped the world and seeing men as gendered actors as well In thirteen essays that show how gendered ideas have shaped the ways in which people have represented experienced and consumed their world Virginia Scharff and her coauthors explore interactions between gender and environment in history Ranging from colonial borderlands to transnational boundaries from mountaintop to marketplace they focus on historical representations of humans and nature on questions about consumption on environmental politics and on the complex reciprocal relations among human bodies and changing landscapes They also challenge the ecofeminist position by challenging the notion that men and women are essentially different creatures with biologically different destinies Each article shows how a person or group of people in history have understood nature in gendered terms and acted accordingly often with dire consequences for other people and organisms Here are considerations of the ways we study sexuality among birds of William Byrd s masking sexual encounters in his account of an eighteenth century expedition of how the ecology of fire in a changing built environment has reshaped firefighters own gendered identities Some are playful as in a piece on the evolution of snow bunnies to shred betties Others are dead serious as in a chilling portrait of how endocrine disrupters are reinventing humans animals and water systems from the cellular level out Aiding and adding significantly to the enterprise of environmental history Seeing Nature through Gender bridges gender history and environmental history in unexpected ways to show us how the natural world can remake the gendered patterns we ve engraved on ourselves and on the planet
