Gender Gap Judith Eve Lipton, Let s face it say Barash and Lipton Males and females boys and girls men and women are different To be sure these differences are often heightened by distinctions in learning cultural tradition and social expectation but underpinning them all is a fundamental difference that derives from biology Throughout the natural world males are those creatures that make sperm females make eggs The oft noticed gender gap derives in turn from this gamete gap In Gender Gap Barash and Lipton husband and wife professor and physician biologist and psychiatrist explain the evolutionary aspects of male female differences After describing the theory underlying the evolutionary explanation of male female differences in accessible lay person s language they show how it applies to specific examples of animal behavior Then they demonstrate comparable male female differences in the behavior of human beings cross culturally as well as within the United States Barash and Lipton apply this approach to male female differences in sexual inclinations propensities for violence parenting styles and childhood experiences They invoke much work within the traditional social sciences such as psychology anthropology and sociology which have typically ignored biological factors in the past Part of the highly successful revolution in scientific thought has been the recognition that evolutionary insights can illuminate behavior no less than anatomy and physiology This new discipline sometimes called sociobiology or evolutionary psychology promises to help us make sense of ourselves and of our most significant others shedding new light on what it means to be male or female Now available in paperback with a new introduction by the authors this accessible volume integrates work from a variety of fields applying a new paradigm to research on gender differences David P Barash holds a Ph D in zoology and is professor of psychology and zoology at the University of Washington where he has taught since 1973 He has been especially active in the growth and development of sociobiology as a scientific discipline and has received numerous grants and awards Barash is the author of more than 170 technical articles and 20 books Judith Eve Lipton received her M D degree from the University of North Carolina Chapel Hill and completed her residency in psychiatry at the University of Washington She is the founder and president emerita of the Washington Physicians for Social Responsibility and Fellow of the American Psychiatric Association specializing in women s health

Gender Gap DAVID P. BARASH, Professor Emeritus of Psychology David P Barash, PH.D., Judith Eve Lipton, 2017-10-12 Let s face it say Barash and Lipton Males and females boys and girls men and women are different To be sure these differences are often heightened by distinctions in learning cultural tradition and social expectation but underpinning them all is a fundamental difference that derives from biology Throughout the natural world males are those creatures that make sperm females make eggs The oft noticed gender gap derives in turn from this gamete gap In Gender Gap Barash and Lipton husband and wife professor and physician biologist and psychiatrist explain the evolutionary aspects of male female differences Making Sense of Sex David Barash, Judith Eve Lipton, In Making Sense of Sex the husband and wife team of David Barash an evolutionary biologist and Judith Lipton a clinical psychiatrist draw on their respective areas of expertise to explore and explain the central fact of our existence that men and women are fundamentally unalterably different. They present an eye opening and wide ranging consideration of what those differences are, how they came to be, why they are important and what they mean in our everyday lives. The authors integrate biological and anthropological findings with real life stories of individuals to address the conundrums that surround male female behavior and relationships. Drawing on the latest research in evolutionary biology, they trace the multifaceted gender gap to the basic defining difference between males and females: that one makes sperm, the other eggs. They show how that distinction explains why women and men differ in essential ways, exploring such questions as: Why are men more attracted than women to pornography, group sex, and one night stands? Why are women the gatekeepers of sex? Why do women have orgasms? Making Sense of Sex is a highly informative and entertaining look at human relationships. The book will help readers not only to better understand themselves but to better understand their children, their relatives, and their lovers, with whom they share so much, yet find so infuriatingly and fascinatingly different.

Gender Gap David P. Barash, Judith Eve Lipton, 2017-07-12. Let's face it, says Barash and Lipton, males and females, boys and girls, men and women are different. To be sure, these differences are often heightened by distinctions in learning, cultural tradition, and social expectation, but underpinning them all is a fundamental difference that derives from biology. Throughout the natural world, males are those creatures that make sperm, females make eggs. The oft-noticed gender gap derives in turn from this gamete gap. In Gender Gap, Barash and Lipton, husband and wife, professor and physician, biologist and psychiatrist, explain the evolutionary aspects of male female differences.

How Women Got Their Curves and Other Just-So Stories David P. Barash, Judith Eve Lipton, 2009. The authors demonstrate the pleasure of using evolutionary theory to help make sense of some puzzling aspects of the anatomy, physiology, and behaviour of women.

The Cognitive Foundations of Classical Sociological Theory Ryan McVeigh, 2023-11-10. The Cognitive Foundations of Classical Sociological Theory explores the role that understandings of mind and brain played in the development of sociological theory. It isolates five key authors in the classical tradition and comprehensively explores their oeuvres for moments where they reflect on, engage with, and build from topics related to cognition, placing their work in contact with research today to critically determine areas of relevance, refutation, or revision. Showing how understandings of mind, brain, and body grounded the production of early sociological thought, the book draws attention to the foundational role theories of cognition played in the emergence of sociology as a distinct field of study. With chapters on Comte, Marx, Weber, Durkheim, and Mead, The Cognitive Foundations of Classical Sociological Theory constitutes a novel and timely engagement with canonical social theory, extending its application to contemporary social life. It will therefore appeal to scholars of sociology and psychology with interests in classical social theory, cognition, embodiment, and sociality.
