Abstract.

Recruiting and retaining females within science, engineering and technology continues to challenge many European Higher Education Institutions. This study looks at female self-perceptions relating to effective research work and career progression. Focus groups are used to examine the attitudes and experiences of females, and a questionnaire used to explore perceptions in four main skills areas: group work; communication; personal awareness; and project planning and management. The study indicates consistent female concerns on issues pertaining to effective female role models, negative work-role stereotypes and the work-life balance of an academic career. For all four skills areas, the average confidence scores of the female participants fell below that of males, but these differences were only statistically significant for perceptions on group work and communication skills, and prior to an intense skills development course. Based on these findings, a student workshop on gender issues has been developed, an outline of which is presented.

Keywords: women in engineering; gender issues; skills perceptions.

1. INTRODUCTION

Concerns of gender disparities in, for example, student attrition and career progression [1], positive college experiences [2] and general barriers to participation [3, 4] have been widely reported. Recruiting and retaining females within science, engineering and technology (SET) continues to challenge many European Higher Education Institutions: compared to males, fewer female undergraduates continue into the postgraduate, postdoctoral and academic levels. This trend is not limited to academic realms, with evidence to suggest that:

“a continuing disproportionate lack of women in most scientific and engineering disciplines, especially at the upper reaches of the professions” [5]

Several possible reasons for such an occurrence have been postulated in the literature, and include issues pertaining to: a lack of female role models; implicit gender differences in communication and collaboration styles which may disadvantage females in established, male-dominated groups; subtle forms of discrimination; and the real and perceived challenges associated with balancing a work and family life.

A lack of female role models in engineering education is argued to adversely influence the self-esteem of female students [6] and prevent the formation of a female engineering identity [7]. The lack of visibility of role models at higher performance

Gender Issues in Field Research Carol A. B. Warren, 1988-03 Are there differences in the levels of access given to male and female researchers in the field setting Does gender influence or limit researchers in the types of questions that they are allowed to investigate Warren a well known field researcher addresses these issues using examples from anthropological sociological and organizational research In essence the author shows that ethnography as the polished product of field research cannot be understood without explicitly taking into account the ways the gender of the researcher influences both fieldwork relations and the production of the final report Using a wide range of examples Gender Issues in Field Research successfully discloses gender differences that continue to affect researchers It will serve as an excellent text for field research anthropology or women s studies courses Gender Issues in Field Research would be especially useful in a research methods course and for any researcher who has an investment in conducting nonsexist analyses It brings a different perspective to the continuing development of research methodology from a feminist perspective Feminist Collections Brings a review of gender issues that will be profitable for the beginning field worker as well as those more advanced scholars now keenly attuned to the problematics of reflexivity in this method It is perhaps her section on gender and knowledge that Warren s contribution moves to the leading edge of current concerns about reflexivity and ethnography This volume had an excellent bibliography of recent literature which she has cited and which provides an avenue into this new era and arena of ethnography fieldwork for those who wish to explore Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease Gender Issues in power relations sustainability and ethical conundrums this book is not a simple formulaic how to guide Instead the handbook offers a more critical and reflective approach acting more as a how to start to think critically about text In providing a comprehensive and cutting edge overview of key debates and considerations in the planning doing and wrapping up of field research the handbook shares examples and reflections from experienced field researchers and field class leaders as well as scenarios debates and critical questions to help guide field researchers through their research journey While there is a rapidly expanding array of books on research methods and epistemologies this handbook offers a unique contribution that addresses distinct gaps in the current literature Through a strong emphasis on field class and group based field research this handbook offers a unique resource to support field class leaders in thinking through the design and doing of field classes and adopts a pedagogical approach in asking difficult questions of the reader rather than offering the answer In so doing we promote a deeper reflective engagement with the complexities of the research journey The Routledge Handbook of Field Research includes contributions from over 50 leading authors culminating in an essential resource for both experienced field researchers and field class leaders as well as newcomers to lone and group based field research Femininities in the Field Brooke A.
