In Indian society, gender inequality is a major problem. In India, ingrained gender inequality severely impacts women's lives despite decades of legislation and a constitution that promises equal rights for men and women. Gender gaps persist despite significant economic growth.

Due to a number of causes of gender inequality in India, including the high levels of discrimination against women as well as numerous discriminatory social norms, laws, and cultural practices, India has been ranked poorly on various indices of gender disparity. These include economic participation and opportunity, educational attainment, health and survival, political empowerment, and legal protection. Women are discriminated against and instances of gender inequality occur in India, such as inaccessibility to jobs and education, underrepresentation in politics, poor access to health and nutrition services. Violence against women still exists in the Indian society.
