

On February 25, 1986, Corason Aquino was inducted as the first lady President of the Philippines in Club Filipino, San Juan, Metro Manila. On June 2, 1986, Aquino appointed a Constitutional Commission composed of 50 members which drafted the 1987 Constitution.

On February 2, 1987, the Filipino people voted to ratify the Charter, thereby legislating the restoration of democratic government and institutions in the country. On February 2, 1987, the new Philippine Constitution with 18 articles and 322 sections was submitted to the Filipino people in a plebiscite. The said charter received the approval of 17,058,495 as against the 5,058,714 who voted against it. On May 27, 1987, the first election of the members of the bicameral legislative body and the election of local executives took place.

Effectivity of the 1987 Constitution

The 1987 Constitution was ratified in a plebiscite on February 2, 1987. By that date, therefore, the Provisional Constitution must be deemed to have been superseded. Having become inoperative, respondent OSG Governor could no longer rely on Section 2, Article III, thereof to designate respondents to the elective positions occupied by petitioners. (De Leon, et al. v. Eguerra, G.R. No. 79059, August 21, 1987)

Chapter 2 THE STATE

Introduction

The State as a person of international law should possess the following qualifications: (a) a permanent population; (b) a definite territory; (c) a government; and (d) capacity to enter into relations with other states. (Article I, 1933 Montevideo Convention on the Rights and Duties of the State)

Doctrine of "Acts of State"

The Acts of State Doctrine provides that every state is bound to respect the independence of every other state and the courts will not sit in judgment of another government's acts done within its own territory. (Twining, 2011)

A further restriction of any national jurisdiction consists in the principle that no state has jurisdiction over another state. This principle has been known for ages as the maxim par in parem non habet imperium (Latin which means equals do not have authority over one another). It is based upon the mutual independence of sovereigns and the fact resulting therefrom, that no state is its capacity as a subject of international law can be subject to the laws of another state. This also means that acts carried out by a state in the exercise of its sovereign powers are exempted from the jurisdiction of other states by virtue of their very nature. Thus, foreign states are exempted from municipal jurisdiction of another state. The immunity granted to foreign states in the municipal courts of foreign states extends to the representatives of the said sovereign.

Elements of the State

From the above definition of the State, its elements can be extracted: people, territory, government, and sovereignty.

A. People or Permanent Population

Permanent population refers to an adequate number of people that is permanently linked to a specific piece of territory. There is no required number of people that would constitute as an element of the state. There is also no requirement for the population to be indigenous and the extent of social and cultural cohesion required is also unclear. In reality, most of the population of a state will be its 'nationals' and have a right to reside in that state. The criteria of qualification for nationality are determined by national law. The size of the population is immaterial. (<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/ society-politics-law/exploring-the-boundaries-of-international-law/context-section-2> - accessed date: 1/15/2020)

Citizens and Subjects

Generally, the people comprising the state are referred to as citizens. Citizens are entitled to the rights and privileges of a freeman. Citizens are either natural born or naturalized and they owe allegiance to a government, and are entitled to protection from it.

Citizenship is the status of a person recognized under the custom or law of a state that bestows on that person the rights and privileges of membership in a political community. Such rights and privileges include the right to vote, work and live in the country and the right to return to the country. Besides other rights. A citizen may also be subject to certain duties, such as the duty to serve in the army. A person may have multiple citizenships and a person who citizenship rights like the right to vote for the public officers of the United States. (Cruz, International Law)

B. Definite Territory

It refers to the portion of the earth that is under the effective control of the state, and which demarcates the state from its neighbors. The size of the territory of states can vary widely from Russia with 17 million square kilometers to the principality of Monaco with just two square kilometers territory. The borders of the state's territory need to be reasonably determinate. The territory of the state sometimes is defined by a treaty or mandated by its constitution. Territorial disputes with neighboring states would not normally affect the state's status in international law.

Territory is a geographical area that is owned and controlled by the state in order to exercise its sovereignty. The territory of the state must be permanent and with well-defined boundaries. There is no required size or extent of the state's territory, but it must be large enough to provide for the needs of the people of the state. The territory of the state consists of terrestrial or land territory, fluvial and maritime or water domain, and aerial domain. The territory of the Philippines is defined by Article I of the 1987 Constitution.

The Terrestrial or Land Domain

This is derived from Latin terrestre - from terra which means earth. The terrestrial domain refers to the landmass, which may be integrated or dismembered, or partly bound by water, or consists of one whole island. It may also be composed of several islands, the
