Ultrasound imaging has reached a stage of sophistication where by diagnostic information can be gained without discomfort to the patient and with complete absence of morbidity and mortality The procedure is quick safe noninvasive and in many instances can supersede and obviate more time consuming procedures requiring catheterization injection of a contrast material and radiographic imaging In obstetrical problems the danger of ionizing radiation to the fetus is eliminated In debilitated and very ill patients this simple and painless method becomes the procedure of choice Unique features of ultrasound equipment allow for pinpoint localization of lesions and direct visual guidance of percutaneous puncture techniques for aspiration and biopsy. The accuracy of ultrasound-guided punctures and the absence of side effects make this modality far superior to percutaneous invasive techniques performed with other imaging systems. Renal cyst puncture and amniocentesis are but two of the procedures in which ultrasonic guidance is the method of choice. Dr. Hassani has thoroughly explained and carefully explored the wide variety of examinations available with ultrasound. The large volume of material and the clear interpretation makes this book of great interest to all of the medical profession. In addition to the existing methods available for diagnostic interpretations, this method of noninvasive diagnosis should find its way into every hospital or center where good medical care is provided. Opportunities and Challenges of Interprofessional Collaboration and Education Jill Thistlethwaite, Peter Musaeus, Martina Mueller-Schilling, Sophie Schlosser, 2024-04-01 Interprofessional collaboration is essential in meeting today's health challenges which demand high flexibility and innovation. Many health organizations including the World Health Organization (WHO) demand that interprofessional collaboration should be taught and learned globally. Even so, interprofessional education tools have not yet been widely implemented in the curricula of medical professions including physicians, nurses, pharmacists, physiotherapists, etc. This training usually takes place separately. Collaboration is necessary in health professions education as it can allow professionals to increase their skills and help them achieve more than they would at an individual level. Collaboration also allows for more open-minded approaches when facing new ways of thinking. When knowledge is shared, healthcare employees are more encouraged to share their own ideas and concerns. These achievements of interprofessionalism within health profession education not only benefit the student and employee but also optimize patient care and increase patient safety. Productivity can also be increased and therefore reduce costs overall.
