

EXPERIMENT #4 – Chemical Kinetics

GRADING THE LAB REPORT

Procedure	20 points
Data & calculations	80 points
TOTAL	100 points

Say your student gets a score of 50/100. This is a 50%. ($50/100 \times 100\% = 50\%$). This translates to 6/12 points. Please indicate (circle in red, highlight, or something obvious) these point scores so that the students can keep track of how they are doing in lab.

PRELAB LECTURE: Kinetics should have been started in lecture. You will want to give the students good clear instructions on the calculations though.

SAFETY: Be sure to review ALL the safety information on page 45 with the students before beginning the experiment. The potassium permanganate stains skin and clothing. The oxalic acid is toxic!!

EXPERIMENTAL: I will have the water and oxalic acid in bottles with dispensers. The students will only use burets to dispense the potassium permanganate. I think that the most efficient way is for you to set up two or three burets of the potassium permanganate and that will be enough for the entire lab. They don't each need a buret as they only use a total of 7 mLs of the permanganate.

 Use the medium test tubes. Works best if the students continually stir with a stirring rod.

The students put the water and oxalic acid into one test tube and the permanganate in another test tube. When they are ready to start timing, they mix them in one test tube. I found it best to pour the water/oxalic acid mixture into the permanganate.

Temperature Dependence: Start the hot plates with warm water baths as soon as you get into the lab. Fill the beaker $\frac{3}{4}$ full. The baths will then be at a constant temperature when the students are ready for them.

Hot Plates in hood: Set to hot plates in one hood to 155°C and this will give a water bath of about 50-55°C. Set the other hood of hot plates to 120°C. This will give a water bath of about 40-45°C. They should hold the test tubes in the bath with their test tube clamp.

* one trial only please! (unless they had a disastrous run)
