Abstract: The classical Rolle's theorem establishes the existence of (at least) one zero of the derivative of a continuous one-variable function on a compact interval in the real line, which attains the same value at the extremes, and it is differentiable in the interior of the interval. In this paper, we generalize the statement in four ways. First, we provide a version for functions whose domain is in a locally convex topological Hausdorff vector space, which can possibly be infinite-dimensional. Then, we deal with the functions defined in a real interval: we consider the case of unbounded intervals, the case of functions endowed with a weak derivative, and, finally, we consider the case of distributions over an open interval in the real line.

1. Introduction

The celebrated Rolle's theorem, familiar to undergraduate students in Analysis (see, e.g., [1] just to quote a book, or the book by the second author [2]), can be stated as follows:

Let f be a function that is continuous on the closed interval $[a,b]$ and differentiable on the open interval $]a,b[$. If $f(a) = f(b)$, then there exists a point c in $]a,b[$ for which $f'(c) = 0$.

This theorem appeared in a primitive form in a book dated 1690 (see a translation in [3]), and it has an interesting story (see [4–6]) because Rolle is known paradoxically for his attack on infinitesimal calculus for its "lack of rigour". Since its first appearance, it has attracted the attention of researchers, who have published generalizations in several directions, variants, or also less-standard proofs (see, e.g., a constructive proof in [7]). It had a role in all the levels of study in Mathematics, from school instruction (see, e.g., the experiments in Nepal [8]) to some variants of interest for first-year calculus classes ([9–11] and for second-year calculus classes ([12]) until dynamical systems (see, e.g., [13]). A large body of literature concerns the functions defined in more abstract structures. For instance, the theorem has been considered for complex valued functions in the framework of the complex plane (see, e.g., [14–17]) and for functions defined in finite-dimensional spaces (see, e.g., [18]). Moreover, there exists an "approximate version" for the functions defined in the closure of open connected bounded sets in Banach spaces (see [19–21]) because Rolle's theorem cannot be applied to the functions defined in the closure of the unit ball in infinite-dimensional Banach spaces, where continuous functions may not have minimum and maximum values (because compactness is lost; see, e.g., [22] and the references therein, and also [23]). At last, we mention a version for real functionals defined in a whole real Banach space, which appears in [24], a study on the range of the derivative of functions with bounded support in [25], and the recent contributions [26–32].

The aim of this paper is to prove four results that generalize the classical result.
