Globalization And Labor Markets:

Labor Markets in a Global Economy: A Macroeconomic Perspective Ingrid H. Rima, 2015-05-20 This introductory text on labour economics covers topics such as the shift in America from a manufacturing based economy to a service economy the changes in the economic conditions in the US the implications of NAFTA and GATT and the labour markets

Globalization, Labor Markets and Inequality in India Dipak Mazumdar, Sandip Sarkar, 2008 India started on a program of reforms both in its external and internal aspects sometime in the mid eighties and going on into the nineties While the increased exposure to world markets globalization and relaxation of domestic controls has undoubtedly given a spurt to the GDP growth rate its impact on poverty inequality and employment have been controversial This book examines in detail these aspects of post reform India and discerns the changes and trends which these new developments have created Providing an original analysis of unit level data available from the quinquennial National Sample Surveys the Annual Surveys of Industries and other basic data sources the authors analyse and compare the results with other pieces of work in the literature As well as describing the overall situation for India the book highlights regional differences and looks at the major industrial sectors such as agriculture manufacturing and tertiary services The important topic of labor market institutions both for the formal or organized and the unorganized sectors is considered and the possible adverse effect on employment growth of the regulatory labor framework is examined carefully Since any reform of this framework must go hand in hand with better state intervention in the informal sector to have any chance of acceptance politically some of the major initiatives in this area are critically explored Overall this book will be of great interest to development economists labour economists and specialists in South Asian Studies

Globalization and Labor Conditions Robert J. Flanagan, 2006-07-20 Explains how three mechanisms of globalization international trade international migration and the activities of multinational companies have altered working conditions around the world during the 20th century This book finds that trade migration and multinational companies are associated with improvements in world labor conditions

How has the Globalization of Labor Affected the Labor Income Share in Advanced Countries? Irina Tytell, Florence Jaumotte, 2007-12-01 Labor markets around the world have become increasingly integrated over the last two decades with the entry of China India and the former Eastern bloc into the world trading system the removal of restrictions on trade and capital flows and rapid technological progress At the same time the share of labor in national income decreased in most advanced countries This paper uses a labor share equation derived from a translog revenue function to estimate the contributions of globalization technological progress and labor market policies to the decline in the labor share The results obtained for 18 advanced countries over 1982 2002 suggest that globalization was only one of several factors that have affected the labor share Technological progress especially in the information and communications sectors has had a bigger impact particularly on the labor share in unskilled sectors

Slaughter, Phillip Swagel, 2008 Increased globalization the international integration of markets for goods factors and technology has coincided in the past two decades with a shift in labor demand away from less skilled workers toward those with more skills This shift in labor demand has produced a widening of the gap in wages between the two groups of workers along with rises in income inequality and unemployment primarily among low skilled workers This paper summarizes research on the connection between globalization and labor markets in the advanced economies Much of the concern about the effects of globalization has focused on the impact of imports from developing countries on wages employment and income inequality However the consensus of empirical research is that increased trade accounts for only about 10 to 20 percent of the changes in wages and income distribution in the advanced economies The more important influence on labor markets in the 1980 s and 1990 s has been a technology driven shift in labor demand away from less skilled workers and towards more skilled workers This has resulted in increased wage inequality in some countries and in lower relative employment among unskilled workers in others Increased capital mobility including the outsourcing of production to low wage countries as well as immigration from developing countries to the advanced economies appear to have had only modest effects on labor markets in the advanced economies Nonetheless increased globalization can increase the sensitivity of wages and employment to external shocks and thereby contribute to increased job insecurity Moreover the burden of adjusting to changes in the global economy falls most heavily on low skilled workers Policymakers must keep in mind potential social dislocations from these changes and ensure that those who are displaced do not become marginalized It is important however that any policy actions do not impede adjustment but rather provide incentives for workers and firms to adjust to and therefore gain from changes in the global economic environment

Globalization, Technological Change, and Labor Markets Stanley W. Black, 2012-12-06 Globalization Technological Change and Labor Markets is an edited collection of papers drawn from the conference held at the American Institute for Contemporary German Studies in June 1997 This conference brought German and American perspectives to bear on the complex issues of global competition technological change and labor markets in the welfare state The contributions are organized into five sections dealing with various aspects of the problem 1 Macroeconomic Perspectives 2 Microeconomic Aspects 3 the German Model of Labor Relations 4 the Social Market Economy and 5 Trade Policy and Environmental and Labor Standards This edited collection seeks to explore many of the key issues surrounding the debate over the impact of globalization and technological change on labor markets in Europe and the United States This volume provides path breaking insights as to why globalization has wreaked havoc on the welfare states that had once propelled Western Europe and North America to an unprecedented standard of living throughout the post war period The high level of scholarship contained in the individual chapters forms a compelling argument that will convince even the most resistant skeptics that the days of the classic welfare state are numbered More importantly this book is filled with concrete suggestions based on careful economic analysis as to how technological change and globalization can be harnessed in conjunction with a new role of the state to provide a high standard of living David B Audretsch Ameritech Chair of Economic Development Indiana University Mediterranean Labor Markets in the First Age of Globalization Paul Caruana Galizia, 2015-03-11 Scholars have studied the nineteenth century s unprecedented labor flows in global and specific country contexts but have lacked a comprehensive analysis of the world s old economic core the Mediterranean This work provides answers to important questions such as If the Mediterranean labor market really was integrated then why did globalization affect the Western and Eastern Mediterranean so differently Why did wage inequality rise in the East while it fell in the rest of the labor abundant periphery More broadly was low emigration from Iberia and the East to blame for the Mediterranean s failed integration with the fast expanding global economy This ground breaking research relates these questions to ongoing historical debates on the intensity of intra Mediterranean integration in goods and labor to current heated debates on North African emigration to Europe and to discussions on European economic integration more generally Globalization of Labour Markets Olga Memedovic, A. Kuyvenhoven, Willem T.M. Molle, 2013-03-11 To the classical driving forces of migration such as poverty oppression and war yet another is being added globalization With the increasing economic interdependence between countries migration has become one of the important links Many less developed countries LDCs accept migration of their workers to developed countries DCs because it reduces the pressure on unemployment and remittances increase the capital inflow to the country On the other hand some of the DCs see migration as a threat to their employment and system of social security Participants of the Second Annual Workshop of the Network EU LDC Trade and Capital Relations gave a broad view of the problem which both DCs and LDCs are facing in connection with the globalization of labour markets This volume consists of 10 chapters by scholars from the European Union EU and LDCs Each paper is discussed in terms of its policy relevance by a policy maker as well as by an academic specializing in the field In the opening chapter we aim to do justice to the discussion during the Workshop in Rotterdam in May 1995 at which preliminary versions of all chapters were presented Edited versions of the interventions by the policy makers and experts are included as far as possible after the chapters The opinions expressed in this volume are those of the authors and not necessarily those of their organizations      Labor Markets in the Global Economy Erich Gundlach, Peter Nunnenkamp, 1997 The strikingly different labor market performance of major industrial countries suggests that neither globalization nor skill biased technological change necessarily result in rising unemployment or declining wages of low skilled workers Rather globalization and technological change cause labor market problems in those economies that fail to adjust sectoral production structures in accordance with their comparative advantages Labor market outcomes in Germany especially when compared with the United States suggest that high unemployment is the price for insufficient wage flexibility However the experience of Japan and the United Kingdom points to missing links in the debate on labor market effects of globalization and skill biased technological change In Japan both unemployment and wage disparities remained low The contrasting experience is provided by the United Kingdom where the rising wage gap did not prevent high unemployment of low skilled workers All major industrial countries have been confronted with fiercer import competition and outsourcing in low skill labor intensive industries But the response to this common challenge has different remarkably Japan has outperformed its major competitors in restructuring manufacturing employment towards more sophisticated lines of production and in achieving an appropriate pattern of trade specialization Hence structural change is the key to avoid labor market problems in the era of globalization Different labor market outcomes are closely related to differences in the rate of factor accumulation which comprises physical human and technological capital Especially industrial countries currently plagued with high unemployment have little choice but to forego consumption today in order to improve future real incomes and employment opportunities of lowskilled workers Thus successful structural change does not come for free      How Has the Globalization of Labor Affected the Labor Share in Advanced Countries? Labor Markets and Labor Market Policies Between Globalization and World Economic Crisis Toshihiko Hozumi, 2010

Young Workers, Globalization and the Labor Market Hans-Peter Blossfeld, 2008-11-28 Underpinned by the fact that the globalization process and the subsequent increased level of market uncertainty have paved the way for employment flexibility in modern societies this book examines the labor market chances of young adults in the US and in ten European societies over the past three decades As young adults represent a very vulnerable labor market group flexible and insecure employment tends to be pronounced especially at labor market entry The contributors therefore explore which groups of young adults are especially affected by increasing employment insecurities

Special Issue: Globalization and Labor Markets, 2012

Labor Markets and Labor Market Policies Between Globalization and World Economic Crisis Toshihiko Hozumi, 2010 This publication focuses on studies on Japan and Germany as well as on comparative studies The consequences of globalization and of the world economic and financial crisis are the recurrent theme How did the labor markets cope with the crisis and what are the resulting challenges for labor market policy and social policy On the brink of a global employment crisis following the global financial and economic crisis

this publication analyzes the development of labor markets and labor market policies in two countries which during the second half of the 20th century were among the most successful in terms of economic growth and social inclusion. The recent history of labor markets and labor market policies in Germany and Japan can be divided into four phases: 1 a phase of strong institutional coordination of labor markets before the onset of globalization; 2 the emergence of an employment crisis related to both the challenges of globalization and to nation specific factors notably the burst of the real estate speculation bubble in Japan and reunification in Germany; 3 since 2003 an attempt to solve the employment crisis by a market optimistic approach; and 4 finally new challenges arising from the Global Financial and Economic Crisis of 2009. This book is the outcome of the conference 'The flexibilization of labor markets between globalization and the global economic crisis: Comparing Japan and Germany' which was held at the Bremen University of Applied Sciences in June 2009. Essays on the Local Labor Market Effects of Globalization Oscar Alejandro Mendez Medina, 2015. This dissertation consists of a series of papers studying the effect that globalization in its multiple forms has had on Mexican local labor markets. In Chapter 1 'Trade Shocks and Mexican Local Labor Markets in the Great Recession' I study the role that international trade played in the transmission of the U.S. credit crisis to Mexican local labor markets. The economic opening process that Mexico started by opening up to international trade in the mid 1980s when it became a member of the GATT and then reinforced in 1994 when NAFTA was enacted has created a strong link between the business cycles of Mexico and the United States (Robertson 2000). This trade driven phenomenon has had significant consequences for Mexico's economic geography (Hanson 1996). In particular, easier access to the U.S. market increased the level of dependence on exports to the U.S. for some Mexican municipalities. This increase in dependence was not homogenous throughout the country, mostly due to differences by municipality in transportation costs and industry specialization. This heterogeneity plus the evolution of U.S. trade during the Great Recession 2007-2009, which involved a 40 billion drop in U.S. imports from Mexico, allows me to identify the role that these trade linkages played in the transmission of the crisis to Mexican local labor markets. I show that differences in manufacturing industry structure caused by Mexico's opening process have made a subset of Mexican municipalities especially vulnerable to economic events in the U.S. I find that Mexican regions that exported relatively more to the U.S. experienced large and significant differential effects when compared to municipalities more focused on the domestic market. Mexican regions with significant ties to the U.S. market experienced during the crisis a significantly larger decrease in employment and wages and greater within local labor market adjustments than their less open counterparts, mainly characterized by large drops in manufacturing employment and significant increases in employment in the service and agricultural industries. Pursuing the same line of research, the second chapter of my dissertation explores 'The Effect of Chinese Import Competition on Mexican Local Labor Markets'. Recent estimates of the effect of globalization on labor markets have found that trade is having an increasingly larger impact on wage inequality. Particularly relevant is the 'China Syndrome'

study by Autor Dorn and Hanson 2013a which presents evidence on the disruptive effects that import competition can have on a developed economy by estimating the impact that Chinese import competition had on U S local labor markets One would expect to find that Chinese exports also had a large and significant effect on developing economies particularly on those specialized in the production of labor intensive goods My paper contributes to the study of this relationship by analyzing the Mexican case Following the methodology introduced in Autor et al 2013a I exploit variation across Mexican regions in import exposure stemming from initial differences in industry specialization in order to estimate the effect Chinese competition had on local Mexican labor markets Also by taking advantage of the Mexican exports high dependence on the U S market I estimate the effect that China caused trade diversion had on Mexican labor markets I find that the increase in competition decreased the employment share in manufacturing for the average Mexican local labor market This effect was found to be larger for regions with high exposure to Chinese competition in the U S market showing that there was a significant negative indirect effect from China s trade growth Workers mobility also increased due to this negative shock I name the third chapter Mexican Migrants Response to a Trade Shock This study exploits the variation created by Chinese import competition across Mexican states and combines it with variation across U S states in their likelihood of receiving Mexican migrants in order to yield a causal estimate of the variation in the Mexican share of the labor force across U S states The purpose of this study is both to determine whether international migration can be affected by external trade shocks a topic very scantily studied in the economic literature of both trade and migration and to open the doors to a study of migration effects on the receiving economy by using a plausibly exogenous shock to migration as is the increase in import competition by China I find that the increase in Mexican imports from China had a significant effect on Mexican workers mobility towards the U S labor markets
