Vasculitis and rapidly progressive glomerulonephritis in the elderly

RM Higgins, DJA Goldsmith, J Connolly, JE Scoble, BM Hendry, P Ackrill, MC Venning

Summary

The proportion of patients with vasculitis and rapidly progressive nephritis aged 70 years or over has risen from about 10% in the 1980s to over 30% in series reported in the 1990s. This study was undertaken to examine the presentation and outcome of such older patients. Seventeen of 56 patients (30%) who presented at two renal units were aged 70 years or over. Mean creatinine level at presentation was 530 µmol/l, and five patients received dialysis at presentation. Outcome was dependent on three factors, namely co-morbid pathology, response to immunosuppressive therapy, and the occurrence in three cases of temporary spontaneous partial remission. Overall patient survival at one and two years was 62.5% and 50%, respectively, and 90% and 100% of surviving patients were independent of dialysis at one and two years, respectively. Response to chemotherapy was excellent, with full rehabilitation in many cases and no deaths directly attributable to adverse effects of immunosuppressive therapy. We conclude that diagnosis of vasculitis and rapidly progressive glomerulonephritis by renal biopsy and the subsequent administration of chemotherapy (including cyclophosphamide in many cases) resulted in a worthwhile benefit in these elderly patients.

Keywords: vasculitis, glomerulonephritis, cyclophosphamide, elderly patients.

It is increasingly recognised that rapidly progressive glomerulonephritis with vasculitis occurs in elderly patients. In three British series published in the mid 1980s, only 15 of 132 patients (11%) were aged over 70 years,¹⁻³ and in some series no patient was aged over 70 years.^{4,5} However, in three recently published series of patients suffering from Wegener's granulomatosis or rapidly progressive glomerulonephritis, 28 out of 86 patients (33%) were aged over 70 years.⁶⁻⁸ In a survey of patients with Wegener's granulomatosis and polyarteritis performed by the European Dialysis and Transplant Association in 1991, over 20% of patients were aged over 65 years.⁹

It has not been shown, however, whether or not the increased frequency of diagnosis of these conditions in elderly patients is associated with a worthwhile outcome. Significantly worse survival in older patients has been reported by several groups,^{3,7,10} and in one series there was a mortality of 41% in patients aged over 50.⁷ More recently a mortality of 36% in patients aged over 70 years was reported in one series,⁷ and of 56% in another.⁸

The aim of this study was to describe the presentation and outcome of vasculitis and rapidly progressive glomerulonephritis in elderly patients, with particular attention to the risks and benefits of immunosuppressive therapy.

Patients and methods

Patients presenting to the Renal Units at King's College Hospital (Dulwich) and at the Withington Hospital between January 1991 and December 1993 inclusive were included if there were systemic vasculitis or a proliferative glomerulonephritis with crescents. Patients with anti-glomerular basement membrane disease were excluded, although those with vasculitis associated with both anti-glomerular basement membrane antibodies and anti-neutrophil cytoplasmic antibodies (ANCA) were included. One patient (case 17) will be the subject of a separate publication.

Data were recorded retrospectively on a standard data acquisition sheet in both centres. ANCA were measured in both centres by standard indirect immunofluorescence techniques. Cytoplasmic (cANCA) and perinuclear (pANCA) antibodies were distinguished according to immunofluorescent staining patterns, and the presence of pANCA confirmed by ELISA if strongly positive antinuclear antibodies (ANA) were present.

Prednisolone was given in both centres at a dose of 40-60 mg/day, tapering to 10 mg/day by three months. Cyclophosphamide was given as 3-4 weekly intravenous pulses at the Withington Hospital, and at King's College from mid-1993. The dosage was 0.8 g/m², reduced to 0.5 g/m² if there was renal failure (plasma creatinine > 250 µmol/l). These dosages were halved in frail patients over 65 years. Prior to this date at King's College, cyclophosphamide was given by mouth at a dose of 2-2.5 mg/kg daily. The doses of oral and pulse intravenous cyclophosphamide were adjusted according to the total peripheral white cell count. In three cases at King's College,
