Reading Cultures Molly Abel Travis,1998 Molly Abel Travis unites reader theory with an analysis of historical conditions and various cultural contexts in this discussion of the reading and reception of twentieth century literature in the United States Travis moves beyond such provisional conclusions as the text produces the reader or the reader produces the text and considers the ways twentieth century readers and texts attempt to constitute and appropriate each other at particular cultural moments and according to specific psychosocial exigencies She uses the overarching concept of the reader in and out of the text both to differentiate the reader implied by the text from the actual reader and to discuss such in and out movements that occur in the process of reading as the alternation between immersion and interactivity and between role playing and unmasking Unlike most reader theorists Travis is concerned with the agency of the reader Her conception of agency in reading is informed by performance psychoanalytic and feminist theories This agency involves compulsive reiterative performance in which readers attempt to find themselves by going outside the self engaging in literary role playing in the hope of finally and fully identifying the self through self differentiation Furthermore readers never escape a social context they are both constructed and actively constructing in that they read as part of interpretive communities and are involved in collaborative creativity or what Kendall Walton calls collective imagining

Handbook of Literacy and Technology David Reinking,Michael C. McKenna,Linda D. Labbo,Ronald D. Kieffer,1998-04-01 The major shift going on today in the technologies of reading and writing raises important questions about conventional conceptions of literacy and its role in education society and culture What are the important characteristics of electronic forms of reading and writing distinguishing them from printed forms To what extent and in what ways is literacy being transformed by new technologies This central question is addressed in this volume from diverse multidisciplinary perspectives The contributing authors focus on a guiding question in one of the following areas which correspond to the major sections of the book Transforming Texts What are the new differences between printed and electronic texts and what are the implications of new textual forms for defining literacy especially in regard to teaching and learning in schools Transforming Readers and Writers How do electronic reading and writing change conceptualizations of literacy development from childhood through adulthood Transforming Classrooms and Schools What are the effects of introducing new reading and writing technologies into schools and classrooms Transforming Instruction How can instruction be adapted in response to the changing literacy landscape and how can teachers and students exploit forms of reading and writing to enhance teaching and learning Transforming Society What are the broad societal implications of the increasing prevalence of electronic forms of reading and writing Transforming Literacy Research What are the questions that must be addressed as digital reading and writing become more common and what approaches to research will be most useful in addressing those questions This volume is the result of an interactive process The contributors met as a group to discuss drafts of their chapters at a one day meeting convened and sponsored by the National Reading Research Center and had read each others chapters prior to this gathering That meeting was followed by a two day conference attended by approximately 180 researchers educators and policymakers who responded to an open invitation to present papers and to attend sessions focusing on the six major themes of the book Contributors then revised their chapters based on interactions with fellow contributors conference participants and volume editors Thus this work is more than just a compilation of the individual authors views Rather it represents a synthesis of a broad range of current thinking about how literacy is being and may be transformed by technology

Technology and Social Inclusion Mark Warschauer, 2004-09-17 Much of the discussion about new technologies and social equality has focused on the oversimplified notion of a digital divide Technology and Social Inclusion moves beyond the limited view of haves and have nots to analyze the different forms of access to information and communication technologies Drawing on theory from political science economics sociology psychology communications education and linguistics the book examines the ways in which differing access to technology contributes to social and economic stratification or inclusion The book takes a global perspective presenting case studies from developed and developing countries including Brazil China Egypt India and the United States A central premise is that in today's society the ability to access adapt and create knowledge using information and communication technologies is critical to social inclusion This focus on social inclusion shifts the discussion of the digital divide from gaps to be overcome by providing equipment to social development challenges to be addressed through the effective integration of technology into communities institutions and societies What is most important is not so much the physical availability of computers and the Internet but rather people's ability to make use of those technologies to engage in meaningful social practices

The Digital Condition Robert Wilkie, 2011-10-03 The acceleration in science technology communication and production that began in the second half of the twentieth century developments which make up the concept of the digital has brought us to what might be the most contradictory moment in human history The digital revolution has made it possible not only to imagine but to actually realize a world in which social inequality and poverty are vanquished But instead these developments have led to an unprecedented level of accumulation of private profits Rather than the end of social inequality we are witness to its global expansion Recent cultural theory tends to focus on the intricate surface effects of the emerging digital realities proposing that technological advances effect greater cultural freedom for all ignoring the underpinning social context But beneath the surfaces of digital culture are complex social and historical relations that can be understood only from the perspective of a class analysis which explains why the new realities of the digital condition are conditioned by the actualities of global class inequalities It is no longer the case that technology can take on the appearance of a simple or neutral aspect of human society It is time for a critique of the digital times In The Digital Condition Rob Wilkie advances a groundbreaking analysis of digital culture which argues that the digital geist which has its genealogy in such concepts as the body without organs spectrality and difference has obscured the implications of class difference with the phantom of a digital divide Engaging the writings of Hardt and Negri Poster Deleuze and Guattari Derrida Haraway Latour and Castells the literature and cinema of cyberpunk and digital commodities like the iPod Wilkie initiates a new direction within the field of digital cultural studies by foregrounding the continuing importance of class in shaping the contemporary
