

Ocean

Say you have a choice, you can go to explore the ocean, or you can go to space and look for a new place to stay. There are millions of other planets that we can live on if people start exploring space now. Earth is hundreds of millions of years away from blowing up. Some reasons to Explore the oceans are, the ocean life supplies health, space is too costly, and why go to space when scientists can send robots.

We should be searching the ocean because ocean life supplies health interests. There are many fish that pose as a health interest. In the article "Mars Can Wait, Ocean Can't" it states "Ocean organisms are said to hold the promise of cures for an array of diseases" (pg. 212). This informs us that we should advance the health of people. While we are putting our money into the ocean, we should also be putting money towards sending robots to space instead of humans.

As well as the other topic, Scientists can help humans by sending robots to space instead of humans. Scientists can send robots to space because, they are more reliable and efficient, also, it is safer for robots to go to space than humans. According to "Packing for Mars" it states, "what good will come from sending humans to Mars. Especially when robotic landers can do a lot of the science just as well, if not as fast" (pg. 219). This shows why people should give money to send robots instead of humans. It also shows that while humans can't do everything, robots can do more.

Some people may think that space exploration is better because it costs less money. However, these claims are invalid because, space exploration costs a lot more than ocean exploration. As the article "Packing for Mars" states, "An outside estimate of the cost of a manned mission to Mars is roughly $500 billion" (pg. 219). This shows that money can be saved for both projects. Also, the scientists don't need money to make money because they already have the things, while humans have to be fed and have to be living or you can't do anything.

People should use their money on the planet they live on before they spend it on other planets. While money is big factor in humanity people can use it in useful ways. The ocean can help humanity with health benefits and more life. While space is too expensive and isn't necessary now. Ocean is more useful than space exploration at the moment.
