

Administration and Management in Physical Education and Health Education Programs

INTRODUCTION

This module will review the history of managing sports. Further, it will outline the history of academic programming for sport administrators or managers. Finally, the future of sport management will be outlined. Sport administration or management has existed since the time of the ancient Greeks and Romans, when combat among gladiators or animals attracted crowds of spectators. Olympic records show Herod, king of Judaea, was honorary president of the 11th century Olympics. It can be assumed, given the magnitude of these events, that there must have been purveyors of food and drink, promoters, purchasing agents, marketing personnel, and event managers. This is evident in the film Gladiator. Sports in the United States presently are particularly associated with education, with mostly high schools and universities having organized sports. College sports competitions play an important role in the American sport culture. In many cases, college athletics are more popular than professional sports with the major sanctioning body being the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA). This is unique to the United States. Other countries have developed sports through organized sport clubs that are completely separate from the education system. The following will review various organizing and regulating organizations that have managed sports on various levels for decades before sport management became an academic program. Without these organizations, sports would not be managed or regulated well. Beginning in the early 1990s, the landscape began to change as young professionals trained to manage sport started to graduate.
