Heiss, 1985-08-01 Neuropsychological Function and Brain Imaging Erin D. Bigler, Ronald A. Yeo, Eric Turkheimer, 2013-11-11 Over the past two decades researchers and clinicians in the neurosciences have witnessed a literal information explosion in the area of brain imaging and neuropsychological functioning Until recently we could not view the nervous system except through the use of invasive procedures Today a variety of imaging techniques are available but this technology has advanced so rapidly that it has been difficult for new information to be consolidated into a single source The goal of this volume is to present information on technological advances along with current standards and techniques in the area of brain imaging and neuropsychological functioning The quality of brain imaging techniques has improved dramatically In 1975 one had to be content with a brain image that only offered a gross distinction between ventricular cavities brain and bone tissue Current imaging techniques offer considerable precision and approximate gross neuroanatomy to such an extent that differentiation between brain nuclei pathways and white gray matter is possible These technological advances have progressed so rapidly that basic and clinical research have lagged behind It is not uncommon particularly in longitudinal research for the technical methodology of a study to become obsolete while that study is still in progress This has hampered certain aspects of systematic research and has also produced the need for a textbook that could address contemporary issues in brain imaging and neuropsychology Clinical efficacy of positron emission tomography WD Heiss, G. Pawlik, K. Herholz, K. Wienhard, 2012-12-06 The series of workshops sponsored by the European Communities started with Methodology of PET at Hammersmith Hospital London in March 1984 This was followed by Radiochemistry Methodology and

Standardization in PET at the Service Hospitalier Frederic Joliot in Orsay France in March 1985 Both these meetings were in the opinion of all participants great successes and it was agreed that such work shops should continue and be organized on the same basis After these two workshops on the fundamentals of PET time now is ripe to evaluate the clinical efficacy of PET investigations and to discuss to what extent the information provided by this high technology and theoretical area has contributed to the understanding of disease mechanisms leading to immediate clinical applications As pointed out in the previous meetings PET using short lived radioisotopes produced in an on line cyclotron is restricted to a few centers Therefore the topics studied so far were mainly of scientific interest and clinical problems were dealt with only marginally Before this costly technique can be spread and new information made accessible to a broader clinical clientele its clinical value must be demonstrated So far in the majority of studies the central nervous system was the primary target organ and PET has contributed a great deal to our understanding of brain physiology and pathology Also on the heart a substantial number of studies have been performed in various centers but the application of PET to this organ is still somewhat limited
