Barrier	Cell membranes separate the cell from the extracellular environment and providing the cell with its fundamental structure.
Controlling movement	The membranes are semi-permeable , which means that they will allow certain molecules to enter/exit, while others are unable to do so. Molecules and ions can cross the cell surface membrane through either diffusion, osmosis, or active transport.
Cell signalling	Hormones (chemical messengers) bind to complementary receptors on the plasma membrane of target cells.
Cell recognition	Plasma membranes have structures on them which allow the cell to be recognised by other cells (e.g. cells of immune system).
