

Automating IT Operations: Moving from Maintenance to Value Creation

Abstract: Many enterprises are wrestling with the challenge of establishing a connection between business objectives, IT strategy, and day-to-day IT operations. Without a direct link connecting strategy to a plan for execution through daily operations, IT organizations become vulnerable to excessive costs, internal failure, and, ultimately, replacement by outsourced services. We show how applying process orientated discipline to systems and applications management enables IT optimization at the organizational-level and provides for significant productivity improvements. Management blueprints which document operational workflows and procedures provide a basis for regaining control of processes and for further improvements thru automation. We conclude with a discussion of how C2O™ from Optinuity, Inc. will address some of the core problems involved with establishing and maintaining IT processes to support the achievement of business goals.
