Tramontana, Stephen R. Hooper, 2013-11-21 Neuropsychology has its roots in clinical neurology Reading case descriptions by 19th century neurologists such as Wernicke's painstakingly detailed examinations of patients with the aphasic symptom complex makes it obvious that neuropsychology is not a new discipline Even the marriage with psychology is not new the neurologist Arnold Pick for example was fully conversant with the developments in contemporary psychological as well as linguistic research However the primary focus of 19th and early 20th century psychology was on general psychology and only a small number of psychologists ventured into what then was called differential psychology the psychology of individual differences including a few who became attached to neurological research and rehabilitation units after World War I It remained until World War II for psychologists to establish a more solid working relationship with neurology What psychology had to offer to neurology was its experimental skill the development of a sophisticated methodology and for clinical work the development of psychometrics On the whole the marriage between the two disciplines has been fruitful leading to new insights models and discoveries about brain behavior relationships documented in several textbooks which appeared in rapid succession since the 1960s In clinical practice neuropsychology has been inventive in some respects in others merely introducing psychometric rigor to already existing neurological examinations As described in greater detail in this book developmental neuropsychology is of even more recent origin
