Databases that contain the complete text of secondary source documents comprising the database. World Advertising Research Center WARC (www.warc.com)

A full text database or a complete text database is a database that contains the complete text of books, dissertations, journals, magazines, newspapers or other kinds of textual documents. It is opposed both to a bibliographic database (only covering bibliographical information and possibly abstracts and thus being a partial text database) and to a non-bibliographic database (such as, for example, a directory or a numeric database). One of the earliest systems was IBM STAIRS
