

Features of Fiction Texts

Setting

The setting is where the story is happening. This is usually described at the start of the text.

Characters

There will usually be a variety of characters in a story – some good and some bad. There will usually be one or two main characters.

Theme

There will be a main theme or concept in the story, e.g. good vs evil, romance or a moral to be learnt.

Problem

The problem is when something happens in the story, usually involving the main character, that needs to be solved. Different characters might react to the problem in different ways.

Resolution

The resolution is the way that the problem in the story is solved and how the story comes to its end. Usually, there are happy endings, although sometimes a story may have a sad ending or end with a cliffhanger (an ending which leaves the reader wanting to know what happens next).

Third Person

The story is usually written in third person from the character's point of view. Occasionally, a story may be in first person ('I', 'we' etc).

Vocabulary

The vocabulary used in fiction texts is imaginative to make the story interesting for the reader. The author will use a range of exciting verbs and use interesting adjectives and adverbs to describe settings, characters and actions.
