Winthrop White,1956 The Unconscious the Fundamentals of Human, Personality Normal and Abnormal Morton Prince,2015-06-25 Excerpt from The Unconscious the Fundamentals of Human Personality Normal and Abnormal This work is designed to be an introduction to abnormal psychology The problems considered however belong equally to normal psychology in that they are problems of psychological functions and mechanisms I have made no attempt to develop any particular school of psychological theory but rather so far as may be to gather together the knowledge already gained and lay a foundation which can be built upon by any school for the solution of particular problems especially those of special pathology I have therefore endeavored to avoid controversial questions although this of course has not been wholly possible and indeed so far as special pathological conditions the psychoses have been considered it has been for the purpose of providing data and testing the principles adduced The inductive method alone I believe as in the physical sciences can enable us to arrive at sound conclusions justify the formulation of theories to explain psychological phenomena Because of the very difficulties of this field of research one of which is that of submitting to experimental conditions complex psychological phenomena having so many factors it is all the more incumbent that the inductive method should be employed About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books Find more at www forgottenbooks com This book is a reproduction of an important historical work Forgotten Books uses state of the art technology to digitally reconstruct the work preserving the original format whilst repairing imperfections present in the aged copy In rare cases an imperfection in the original such as a blemish or missing page may be replicated in our edition We do however repair the vast majority of imperfections successfully any imperfections that remain are intentionally left to preserve the state of such historical works The Unconscious Morton Prince, 1973 This work is designed to be an introduction to abnormal psychology The problems considered however belong equally to normal psychology The present volume consists of selected lectures with the exception of four from courses on abnormal psychology delivered at the Tufts College Medical School 1908 10 and later at the University of California 1910 These again were based on a series of papers on the Unconscious published in the Journal of Abnormal Psychology 1908 9 of which they are elaborations Since the lectures were delivered a large amount of new material has been incorporated and the subject matter considered in more detail and more exhaustively than was practical before student bodies. The four additional lectures X XI XII and XIII appeared in abbreviated form in the same Journal Oct Nov 1912 under the title The Meaning of Ideas as Determined by Unconscious Settings As the subconscious and its processes are fundamentals both in the structure of personality and in the many mechanisms through which personality normal and abnormal finds expression the first eight lectures are devoted to its exposition Indeed the subconscious is not only the most important problem of psychology it is the problem The study of its phenomena must be preliminary to that of the functioning mechanisms of both the normal mind and of those special pathological conditions the psycho neuroses which modern investigators are tracing to its perversions It ought to be possible to construct the theory of the subconscious by inductive methods on the basis of facts of observation just as any theory of the physical sciences is constructed This task I have set before myself as well as that of giving precision to our conception of the theory and taking it out of the domain of philosophical concepts With this purpose in view I have endeavored to apply the method of science and construct the theory by induction from the data of observation and experiment I have divided the subconscious into two classes namely 1 the unconscious or neural dispositions and processes and 2 the coconscious or actual subconscious ideas which do not enter the content of conscious awareness In these lectures I have also endeavored Lectures XIV XVI to develop the phenomena of the emotional innate dispositions which I conceive play one of the most fundamental parts in human personality and in determining mental and physiological behavior Experimental methods and the well known clinical methods of investigation have been employed by me as far as possible The data made use of have been derived for the most part from my own observations though confirmatory observations of others have not been neglected Although a large number and variety of subjects or cases have been studied as they have presented themselves in private and hospital practice the data have been to a large extent sought in intensive studies on particular subjects carried on in some cases over a period of many years These subjects because of the ease with which subconscious and emotional phenomena were either spontaneously manifested or could be experimentally evoked were particularly suitable for such studies and fruitful in results It is by such intensive studies on special subjects rather than by casual observation of many cases that I believe the deepest insight into mental processes and mechanisms can be obtained The favorable reception which was given to the first edition of this work has tempted me in preparing a new edition at the request of the publishers to incorporate four additional chapters dealing with the general principles underlying the structure and dynamic elements of human personality Lecture XVII and a study of a special problem in personality in which these principles are involved namely the psychogenesis of multiple personality as illustrated by a study of the case known as B C A Lectures XVIII XX PsycINFO Database Record c 2012 APA all rights reserved
