Abstract

The title of this paper: Natural Environment vis-à-vis Living Environment in the Culture and Philosophy of Papua Melanesia questions the Natural Environment versus Living Environment in cultural and philosophical life of the Melanesian in general and Papua in particular. In questioning that, we are confronted with three main points, first, in the daily practice of Melanesian ethnicity, especially in Papua, facing tensions that can also be called conflicts of interest between "environment" as the Natural Environment but because it is confined to foreign elements (outsiders) so it must accept the concept of the Living Environment; second, Environmental Concepts in Culture and Philosophy of Papua-Melanesia, third, Pancasila Steps as a logical consequence of the concept of sustainability. The purpose of this writing is academic and practical. The academic goals is using Structuralism and Holism Structural theory converging with other supporting theories, bringing the comparison and action in a sustainable manner. The practical purpose with respect to that is to know the concept of Papua-Melanesian ethics related to the existence environment in the form of daily life behavior as well as philosophy in the form of "source of life" and "way of life". Furthermore, this research also introduces what is called Papeanities and Melanesianology. Papeanities focuses on the languages (linguistic) of Papua in this case Melanesian-Austroasiatic languages and Non-Austroasiatic languages or the more elegant are called Papean languages. Melanesianology focuses on Anthropology. If Papeanities had just moved in the 1980s, Melanesianology had been going on for a long time since Melanesianist Franz Boas encouraged anthropological studies in the region in 1896. In the meantime, with an understanding of the underlying propriety, through the Department of Anthropology, the Faculty of Social Sciences of Cenderawasih University has been launched the Papean Anthropology as the Basic Science of the Main Lecture. It would hope to be also applying to all universities in the Land of Papua. The results of this study are revealing from the perspective that Papua Melanesia regulates its environment so that it is in harmony with the available natural environment. The Culture and Philosophy of Papua-Melanesian continues only by a balanced touch of the natural environment with the desired environment. What is more understanding can be confronted with the binary opposition method of Structural Anthropology based on the ideas of Claude Lévi-Strauss.

1. Introduction

Given the title listed above, this paper will argue about the compound or combination of the words "natural environment" and "living environment" in the "Melanesian culture and philosophy". The second compound in Indonesian system expressed as Lingkungan Hidup (living environment). Means there is no doubt in involving components which are part of environment as we learn to know which is possessing great deal and important part of the total life of the world being. Disclosure of Lingkungan Hidup to the environment, from the basis of this understanding is necessary to nature.

Carrying such a discourse, we will talk about each of it, but before that, we first question here, what is "environment" as the core of this celebration to day. Popularly said: Environment is everything that is around us. It can be a living thing (nature) or an inanimate object (non-life). It is said, can include physical, chemical and other natural forces. Living beings get life in their environment. They also constantly interact with the nature of their existence and adapt to the conditions in their environment.

In the environment there are different interactions between animals, plants, soil, water, and living things and other non-living things. Because everything is part of the environment of something else. The word environment is used to talk about many things. People in various fields of knowledge use the word environment differently. For example, we know, the electromagnetic environment is radio waves and radiation and other magnetic fields.

In addition, the galaxy environment refers to the conditions among the stars, while the musician or the music environment can not necessarily be located at the same spot/area.

It is also popularly known that in psychology and medicine, one's environment is people, physical objects, places, and the environment in which the person lives. The environment affects the growth and development of the person and gives effect to the behavior, body, mind and heart of a person.

For this reason, discussions about nature various nurturing or shaping are sometimes framed as boundary factors of the environment in this case the natural environment vis-à-vis the living environment.
