

The struggle for the curriculum at the ANC's Solomon Mahlangu Freedom College in Tanzania, 1978–1992

Rajuvelu (Sam) Govender

Abstract

This article is an appraisal of curriculum development at the Solomon Mahlangu Freedom College (SOMAFCO), established in Tanzania in 1978 by the exiled African National Congress (ANC). SOMAFCO closed in 1992 on the eve of a new political dispensation in South Africa. The article focuses on the academic curriculum mode emphasised at the SOMAFCO High School. It examines who the main advocates were and the rationale for their emphasis on an academic approach and contextualises their arguments within the international and African curriculum debates and the experiences of apartheid education in South Africa. The consolidation and implementation of the academic curriculum is traced by examining ANC involvement in education from 1912 to its banning in 1960 and then its commitment to education in exile. The article also examines criticisms from within the ANC levelled against the emphasis on an academic curriculum. It concludes with a brief examination of the impact of an academic curriculum on the new educational dispensation in South Africa in the post-1994 period.

Introduction

The historical struggle for political freedom is inextricably linked to the struggle for and around formal education. The nature of the formal curriculum has been the subject of much debate the world over, and has impacted deeply on the educational experiences of school-going children in the 20th century. Modern curriculum theory and policy also reflects many of the broader general education and national economic development debates, particularly within the context of the era of the post-WW2 world during which liberation from colonialism took place in Africa and elsewhere.
