

'This is a major piece of work. Not since reading Glicksler's History of the Studies have I read a book on the history of geography that was equally bold in its ambition and careful in supporting its claims.'

John E. Agnew, American Geographer

The approaches that characterise a geographical work with real, geographic, cultural and social consequences tend to be in sharp relief not only to particular sites. The reader is shown a kaleidoscope of the different notions, contexts and sites of those who have taken part in this wide-ranging quest for knowledge. Highly readable, and recommended to all students of the history of geography and of science in general.

David Harvey, University of California, Berkeley

'Superb... a real stream, a fire and well-written book that will become the core of all courses and seminars in the history and philosophy of our field.'

John E. Agnew, The Pennsylvania State University

This is the first substantial history of a subject which over the last few centuries or more has played a significant role in the development of human civilisation. The author describes the evolution of the discipline and the careers of Renaissance and early modern Europe, the role of geography during the Scientific Revolution, the Enlightenment and the American Revolution, and the interactions between geography and empire building in the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

Since 1945 activity in the subject has been intense. David Livingstone provides a critical account of the trends, developments and revolutions by which geography has emerged as a multidisciplinary discipline offering unique and essential perspectives on a wide range of pressing world and environmental issues.

This is a book which all geographers will wish to have and to read. It will appeal to students and scholars of related disciplines and the history of science, as well as those interested to know more about this fascinating, yet often misunderstood, subject.

David Livingstone is the author of Nathaniel Scott's Slave and the Culture of American Science (1982), Europe's Population Debacle (1983) and The Protestant Theory (1987), and of many articles on the history of geography and the history of science. He is Reader in the School of Geography, at the Queen's University of Belfast.

Illustration: An engraving of a geographer in uniform, holding a map, with a globe, a telescope, a compass, a sextant, a barometer, a clock, a book, a quill, a pen, a pencil, a ruler, a scale, a pair of compasses, a pair of dividers, a pair of shears, a pair of pliers, a pair of tongs, a pair of forceps, a pair of pincers, a pair of nail clippers, a pair of nail file, a pair of nail brush, a pair of nail polish, a pair of nail varnish, a pair of nail glue, a pair of nail remover, a pair of nail file, a pair of nail brush, a pair of nail polish, a pair of nail varnish, a pair of nail glue, a pair of nail remover.
