Find the Coordinates

When we learn about different states, countries, and continents, we use political maps. They don't show anything about politics, but simply show each state and country's regional borders and international borders. Use the countries you see on the political map on the right.

Physical Maps

Topography

A map is a two-dimensional representation of a place. There are many different kinds of maps that show different information about a certain place. In everyday life, we mostly use city maps that show streets, especially when we are trying to get somewhere new. When we travel from state to state, we use a regional or state map.

Physical Maps

Physical maps come in super handy during a road trip. Knowing where mountains and bodies of water are located, provides important information on the type of terrain one is about to come upon while traveling by car. What can you tell by looking at the physical map below? How did the cartographer use color to communicate the location of mountains and plains?
