ABSTRACT

Since the collapse of Communism in Central and Eastern Europe and the Former Soviet Union, the reform process has been considerably influenced by the neoclassical economic approach to transition. This has heavily emphasized competitive markets and economic liberalization measures per se, often ignoring the establishment of adequate institutional frameworks and resulting in high transition costs and the sidelining of environmental concerns. Alternative models of market transformations in post-Communist societies have been forwarded in the literature, though these have been arguably less influential. We explore the role of these economic ideologies in shaping transition paths, with a focus on the Post-Keynesian economic approach as an alternative to the neoclassical paradigm. We further propose a holistic approach to transition to account for appropriate institutional developments in the area of environmental sustainability. We argue that transition economies need to reconsider their 'market transformation' process in order to capitalize on their potential and mark their own contribution to positive shifts in sustainable development paradigms. Wolf,1997-08-19 Paul J J Welfens and Holger C Wolf While the economies of Asia and more recently South as well as North America have enjoyed sustained high growth the growth performance of western Europe and in particular continental Europe has been rather modest Coupled with sizable improvements in labor productivity and at best steady capital productivity growth proved insufficient to sustain employment levels much less to replicate the US job creation success Relative inflation performance has been much better in the run up to European Monetary Union inflation rates have dramatically converged towards the lower end of the distribution while risk premia on formerly high inflation economies have fallen Yet looking forward the undoubted success in achieving price stability is mitigated by the lackluster growth and in particular employment performance Indeed the relative little attention paid to initiatives directed at raising economic growth is startling not only in the light of the US policy record but also in light of the remarkable rebound of those European economies which have aggressively tackled the structural problems most prominently the UK and Ireland
