

How to WRITE YOUR GROUNDS OF APPEAL

Start from the beginning. Always write your grounds of appeal as if the person reading them knows nothing about the case. It is very likely that the judge deciding your case won't know much about it. So explain the case from the beginning.

Be clear:

- Keep sentences short;
- Use lists where it helps (like this one!);
- Be professional, not emotional;
- Use sections with clear headings, e.g. "Facts", "the Law", "Grounds".

Be brief. The Court of Appeal does not like grounds of appeal to be too long. If they are too long it makes it harder for the Court to understand your case. You do not want that to happen. As a rule of thumb, if your grounds are much longer than 20 pages you have probably gone on too long.

Be persuasive. The Court does not know your case. It has not lived it with you. It does not know (or even decide) if you are innocent. It will presume at first that you were rightly convicted. Your job is to persuade it that you weren't. Make your best points loudly, but without emotion.
