	Cognitive Behavioral (CBCT)	Family of Origin	Structural	Problem-Focused (MRE)	Solution-Focused	Narrative	Collaborative (Language Systems)
Problems Focussed	When an individual belief becomes a demand the problem is focussed. The client gives a negative definition to a circumstance which affects their mood ultimately affecting their reaction and interactions. CBCT is defined by the client's thoughts and values.	Any unresolved problems that an individual faces in his/her current family system that is being transferred from the family system in which they were raised.	The problem is focussed when the family as a whole does not understand which roles they should play and how to interact. The problem is in the rest of the structure of the family system.	Problems develop when change or transitional circumstances are encountered by an individual. Focus on the process surrounding the problem and ineffective attempts to change it.	With every problem there is an exception. Either actual or potential. Helping the client to recognize the potential exceptions to the negative rule or idea with the healing process. The problem is not necessarily related to the solution or vice versa.	When a person defines their life by dominant stories they recall about their experiences. These stories become the "rules" affirming their beliefs. If these stories affirm a negative belief, then that person's outlook on life will yield negative interactions. The person sees self as the problem. The inability to recognize the exceptions to a dominant story cause issues in life development.	Eliminating the concept of family systems and particularly the idea that the system creates the problem (biological & social system) predetermined social system that creates the problem. The language about the problem is what causes the problem and the system of treatment is created. There is no problem until someone begins to talk about it. Therapist sees the problem as an ongoing evolving language system- when the therapist participates in the language you become a part of the system.
Change	Replace irrational beliefs with more stable, hope inspiring Rational beliefs allows the client the ability to stop negative cycles.	Clearly identify the individual's problem from family of origin. Once identified, a simple choice is made whether to continue to perpetuate the problem or eradicate it in the current family system.	The family must change to maintain stability. Also, change occurs at the subsystem level and is a result of manipulations by the therapist of the existing subsystems and maintained by its greater functionality and structure changed.	Interrupting the pattern of the ineffective solution attempts.	The change process is organized around helping clients identify and amplify exceptions to the problem. "No one loves me" the client says	Replace the dominant story with a more preferred story by focusing on exceptions and placing VALUE on positive stories over negative ones.	Language Systems versus Social Systems. Keeping the conversation going, create space to be entertained so there are new possibilities, alternative perspectives.
