

Fetal and Neonatal Physiology

Growth and Development of the Fetus

- The placenta and fetal membranes grow much faster than the fetus at first. In reality, the fetus is almost microscopic for the first 2 to 3 weeks after blastocyst implantation, but after that, the fetus becomes larger.
- The length of the fetus rises inexorably with age. The length is approximately 10 centimeters at 12 weeks, 25 centimeters at 20 weeks, and 53 centimeters (21 inches) at term (40 weeks). The weight of the fetus increases almost in proportion to the cube of the fetus's age since its weight is roughly equal to the cube of its length.
