Ladies Fashion

Circle Dress

The huge skirts of the 1950s mimicked gowns of the Victorian age. "Circle circles" had a 100 circumference and had to be worn with either a hoop skirt or several layers of stiffened petticoats to create the large volume. Women loved full skirts because they hid full hips and thighs. The shin length of the skirts also flattered imperfect legs. No wonder women still love to wear 50's dresses! The natural high waist of dresses was cinched in as small as can be with the help of a girdle. Dress tops were modest but also fitting. The diversity of dress tops changed over the decade. Halter top, V neck, Square neck, cowl neck and shawl collars were all popular. Dresses came in rainbow of solid colors and prints. Polka dots were a favorite especially on pink or red dresses.

Gloves

Wrist length gloves were worn for day and long opera length gloves for evening. Colors always matched other accessories.

Stockings

Nude, sheer, back-seamed stockings (often black seams) sometimes with a decorative heel design. Held up with garters.

Ladies of the 1950's were polished from head to toe with two silhouettes: the full circle dress and the form fitting sheath dress. Both were worn for day and evening styles. Large petticoats with layers of tulle puffed out full dresses while the waist was tightened in by a large belt or sash. The tops were modest but form fitting with a bullet bra worn underneath to enhance the bust. Accessories always matched- purse, hat, gloves and shoes. Pink, teal and black were the hot colors of the 50's. Women took pride in their appearance and followed new trends with enthusiasm.

Sheath Dress

The opposite silhouette of the circle dress was the sheath dress. A narrow waist, enhanced bust, and gentle slope over the hips created an hour glass silhouette. Hem length was still a flattering mid shin. Sheath dresses were most popular in semi formal afternoons and evening styles. Most suits also featured the pencil shape skirt which fit snug but never tight. Most women wore both styles of dresses in the 1950s equally.

Purse

Small clutch purses in envelope style rectangles were the most common style of purse. Women carried a little makeup, a handkerchief, and some small change in her purse. Purses in black or white were the most versatile colors.

Shoes

1950s shoes started with classic pumps with thin small kitten heels or full pointed stiletto heels. Practical walking shoes were also on the scene, loafers and ballet flats. The black and white saddle shoes was especially popular with teens. Thick strap sandals were popular the summer.
