

FIGHT OR FLIGHT RESPONSE

The fight or flight response is a rapid and intense physiological reaction to immediate and sudden danger. It is activated in life-threatening or highly stressful situations.

DEFINITION

Walter Cannon was the first to describe the fight-or-flight response in 1915. He explains that: "...the visceral changes in fear and rage should not be different, but rather, why they should be alike... just because the conditions which evoke them are likely to result in flight or conflict...the bodily needs in either response are precisely the same" (p. 277).

EXAMPLES

Speeding Ticket: When a police car suddenly turns up on your rear bumper with its sirens blaring, you'll feel that fight-or-flight spike in your chest.

A Snake on a Hike: You will feel this response when you notice a snake dangling from a tree branch near her head. You may instinctively jump backwards and scream!
