Sven Schimpf, Robert Phaal, Olivier L. de Weck, Thomas Abele, 2023-05-10 Roadmapping as a method for integrated strategic planning of products technologies processes services or business models is in the focus of the Roadmapping Field Study Since the contents and areas of application of roadmaps vary greatly in practice we set ourselves the goal for the Roadmapping Field Study of finding out how roadmapping is used in the real world The study was first conducted in 2015 The current study is an online survey with 190 participants We asked for the organizational areas of application and the content the organizational integration the use of information sources methods and tools as well as for the challenges and best practices In addition to the results differences to the 2015 study as well as correlations are discussed The results include for example that roadmaps are predominantly used for products in strategic planning and rather rarely for production planning Oil and Gas Field Study United States. Field Study of Nutrient Control in a Multicell Lagoon William T. Engel, Thomas T. Schwing, 1980 Results of a Field Study Using the 3-axis Doppler Shift Current Meter R. C. Seitz, 1971 During the spring of 1967 a field study with the 3 axis Doppler shift acoustic current meter was carried out in the Patuxent Estuary The study extending over a period of 18 days obtained continuous measurements of 3 dimensional water velocities in fields of naturally occurring turbulence as these fields were convected past the Doppler meter which was mounted on a fixed tower in the estuary These measurements with the Doppler meter were supplemented with a large amount of auxiliary data concerning the vertical structure of temperature salinity and currents in the estuary continuous wind speed and direction measurements and in some instances surface wave measurements This report deals with the results of analyzing part of this set of data Author Field Study of Viscous Oil Production by Solvent Stimulation, Wilmington, California H. J. Lechtenberg, 1972 Preliminary results are given of solvent stimulation of two wells producing viscous oil 14 17 API from the Tar zone in the Wilmington field California The solvent coker oil an intermediate refinery product was injected into the formation and after a soak period the well was returned to production Data are given on crude oil properties solvent properties determination of volume of solvent in the produced oil rate of oil production before and after stimulation volume of additional oil produced and volume of solvent recovered Although further study and improvement of the method arcs needed cyclic solvent stimulation appears to be an unqualified success in one well and a moderate success in the other Field Study of Air Content Stability in the Slipform Paving Process ,2012 This study evaluated the impacts of construction on the air content and air void system structure of Portland cement concrete pavements The primary intent was to quantify the air content of fresh concrete before and after it has gone through the slipform paver The air void system parameters of hardened concrete were then assessed using cast and extracted core specimens The results of the air content testing on fresh concrete and the concrete cylinder specimens cast in the field suggested that there is some loss of air as the concrete passes through the paver Laboratory testing performed on cores extracted from the pavement did not provide any conclusive evidence that entrained air is lost during the slipform paving process In fact many of the extracted cores had measured air content values that were much higher than the specification requirement If excessive this could result in increased permeability and low strength related issues Although a rigorous statistical analysis was not performed the results suggest that the air content testing on fresh concrete is not capturing the true air content of the concrete placed with a slipform paver The fresh concrete air content is generally lower than the air content measured in the cores Monthly Catalog of United States Government Publications ,1987
