

RUTACEAE

A family of trees and shrubs with characteristic oil glands in the leaves. There are about 3800 species in 170 genera worldwide, and about 520 species in 41 genera in Australia.

Rutaceae is probably a family of Gondwanan origin although it is now widely distributed through warmer parts of the world. The leaves of all species are dotted with glands containing strongly aromatic volatile oils. The flowers have 4 or 5 petals. The number of stamens is usually equal to, or less than that of the petals. The fruit consists of 4 or 5 joined carpels. Most fruits are dry and open explosively, but some woody-fruited genera have succulent fruits.

The family is economically important since it includes citrus fruits.

Name: Rutaceae = from the European Rue, Ruta graveolens, given most ancient known as a medicinal herb.
