MYSTERY MELODRAMA TEEMING WITH SUSPENSE

Melodrama, the Irving V. Willat production "Fifty Candles," proves beyond a doubt, need not be "old timey" in order to contain the same thrills, excitement and intensity which marked the cheaper class of spoken drama twenty years ago. Especially when incorporated in a thoroughly modern constructed photoplay. "Fifty Candles" is melodrama, unadulterated, but equally rejuvenated, veneered with some extremely artistic touches, making as good photoplay of the kind as is usually seen. It embodies the same sort of mystery plot development as was identified with such old popular plays as "Across the Pacific," "when melodrama bordered upon tragedy, but came out smiling with a "kick" at the finish. If they like substantial melodrama, enjoy being mystified, let "Fifty Candles" light your theatre entrance in incandescent; it is bound to ignite favorable comment.
