A. Soller,A.

W. Olivieri,2003-12-01 This investigation reviewed and evaluated methodologies used for microbial risk assessment with respect to their applicability for reclaimed water applications The investigation was comprised of five primary components a comprehensive database of articles reports and books describing microbial risk assessment methodologies was established and reviewed Risk assessment techniques and models were identified for estimating the public health risk from exposure to microorganisms via reclaimed water applications Two models were identified for further evaluation a static individual based and a dynamic population based In the third component the two models were evaluated to differentiate between the conditions under which models predict similar and substantially different estimations of risk Through numerical simulation exposure pathogen combinations were identified when it may be appropriate to use the less complex static model Case study risk assessment scenarios demonstrated the model selection process for three realistic yet hypothetical reclaimed water scenarios The fourth component presents a constraint analysis for existing reuse regulations The constraint analysis is carried out by documenting the existing reuse regulations The constraint analysis is carried out by documenting the existing regs in three states for landscape irrigation and uses that comparison as a starting point to identify how microbial risk assessment may be useful within the context of existing and potential future water reuse regulations The investigation concludes by identifying criteria for a computer interface that would allow regulatory and or municipal agencies utilities to take advantage of the analysis discussed in the report This publication can also be purchased and downloaded via Pay Per View on Water Intelligence Online click on the Pay Per View icon below      SPORTS PSYCHOLOGICAL APPLICATIONS FOR

Campitelli,Luca Turella,Wolfgang Grodd,2015-12-18 When we think about expertise we usually consider people who master tasks at a level not reachable by most other people Although we rarely realise it however most humans are experts in many aspects of everyday life This expertise enables us to find our way through a complex environment that is our life For instance we can instantly recognise multiple objects and relations between them to form a meaningful unit such as an office Thus research on expertise is not only important to investigate the cognitive and neural processes within an elite group but it is also a powerful tool to understand how everyone can acquire complex skills The goal of this Research Topic is to shed further light on the common and distinct neural mechanisms that implement various kinds of expertise We broadly define expertise as skill in any perceptual cognitive social or motor domain with the common core being optimised information processing due to knowledge acquired from repeated experiences Thus we are interested in the full range of mental processes modulated or modified by expertise from simple object or pattern recognition to complex decision making or problem solving in a particular domain These domains can range from everyday or occupational expertise to sports and rather artificial domains such as board games In all cases the aim should be to elucidate how the brain implements these sometimes incredible feats

We are particularly interested in connecting cognitive theories about expertise and expertise related performance differences with models and data on the neural implementation of expertise We welcome original research contributions using the full range of behavioural neuroscience methods as well as theoretical methodological or historical reviews and opinion papers focusing on any of the above mentioned aspects
