P. Udayakumar, 2001-02-28 Ethnic and religious rivalries are major sources of conflict in South Asia and interpretations of the past are integral parts of the conflict Udayakumar and his contributors provide a careful and comprehensive analysis of the interface between history writing identity constructions and intergroup relations Providing a range of theoretical deliberations they examine specific South Asian conflicts such as the Kashmir issue Hindu Muslim conflict Sinhalese Tamil strife and the human rights struggles of oppressed castes With a view to understanding the ethnic and religious rivalries that have come to be a major source of conflict in South Asia Udayakumar and his contributors analyze the interface between interpretations of the past identity construction practices and intergroup relations With general theoretical perspectives contributors help to explain the various ethnic conflicts in South Asia and other parts of the world The role of history narratives and violent pathologies in those conflicts are also explained Some of the most prominent South Asian conflicts such as the Kashmir decision Ramjanmabhum temple and historicity of caste system in India and the first comer controversy in Sri Lanka are analyzed in detail One of the major conclusions reached is that there is an element of bigotry in certain historiographies and these bigoted histories and ethnic religious histrionics build on and contribute to each other and thrive in certain environments Elevating this debate to a more political level the essays highlight the role of human agency in the decision to remain handcuffed to bigoted histories or to be more aware and struggle for new beginnings They also examine the prospects and possible means of negating the unity of history and metanarratives with their characteristic pathologies and violence and proliferating many histories told from diverse perspectives This book is a stimulating collection for scholars students and researchers dealing with South Asian history as well as current ethnic political and military tensions in the region Love and Revolutions Eloise Hiebert Meneses, 2007-04-26 The market women of India are poor female and untouchable Dalit all highly stigmatized statuses They eek out a living for themselves and their children by doing penny capitalism Traditionally the Hindu cosmology of hierarchy and stasis has circumscribed women s and Dalits lives with notions of purity and pollution But since the advent of nineteenth century Protestant missions a social reform movement has challenged traditional forms of debasement and exploitation Still Dalit communities are responding to unprecedented political opportunities by taking a socially conservative path They are attempting to demonstrate their value by emulating higher caste practices One of these practices is the giving of dowry So market women are painfully saving large amounts of money to marry off their daughters with dowries thereby reinforcing

Hindu values Christianity advocates an ethic based on Jesus two commandments love God and love your neighbor as yourself That ethic has influenced market women s lives more than they know through the construction of the Indian political arena However counter forces are also evident in the public culture Fundamentalist Hinduism responding in part to the threat of global capitalism is actively resisting these reforms and calling all Indians to a national identity that amalgamates race language and territory with Hinduism In such a context market women s conservative response to stigmatization is counterproductive to their own interests A more revolutionary response one based on the Christian ethic of love would offer them unprecedented freedom and dignity This work explores changes in the treatment of the marginalized in Indian society and relates them to contemporary global issues
