Grindr app data mined to expose gay priests

Catholic group legally paid millions in a new frontier of private surveillance

BY MICHELLE BOONSTEIN
AND MAXWELL KOLBY

A group of conservative Catholic activists has spent millions of dollars to buy mobile app tracking data that identified priests who used gay dating and hookup apps and then shared it with bishops around the country. The secretive effort was the work of a Catholic megachurch called Catholic Life and Church for Renewal, whose founders are philanthropists Mark Batterson, John Morris and Tim Burchett, according to public records, an audio recording of the megachurch's president discussing the initiative and other documents. The use of data to conduct a sort of a super-spy hunt in which private individuals can potentially track others' movements, locations and actions using commercially available information. The U.S. data privacy laws prohibit the sale of this data.

The group's aim, according to its records, is to "empower the church to carry out the mission" by giving bishops "robustness" and "resources" with which to identify weaknesses in their clergy from priests.

In response to requests for comment and a detailed list of questions, a spokesman for Catholic Life and Church for Renewal initially said the group's president, April Hernandez, would agree to an interview at a certain time, but Hernandez did not call or return several messages seeking comment. After The Washington Post reached out again, Hernandez on Wednesday provided a first-person piece on the site First Things, saying the new group is the part of the group, which says it has the Church's goal to help the Church to be fully with every soul who would be given, including data, the group said the group has done other projects, in addition to the analysis of dating and hookup apps.

The Post interviewed two people with knowledge of the data.

Asylum seekers are stuck in squalid camps in Mexico, struggling to use Customs and Border Protection's new app to enter the United States

At the border, a technology wall

BY ANDREW R. HERNANDEZ IN MATEMORES, MEXICO

I was supposed to be his last day in Mexico. The 17-year-old Venezuelan boy beamed as he bade farewell to his mother, Liliana Carlin, at a school for migrant children living in tents while waiting for their chance to move to the United States.

His family, finally, had obtained an appointment to follow up with U.S. Customs and Border Protection after weeks of trying to use a new app to secure a slot.

Now they hoped to be allowed to begin a new life in America. The boy was sleeping on the ground. No more tents or kidnapping. No more watching his mother cry.

about 50 families, including his. They'd all made appointments online as family units. But again, were now experiencing a color conundrum: each child to register individually.

"We are never going to leave," Carlin murmured, her face telling her as she watched the waiting child into an almost barren as the "color conundrum."

As the future administrative struggle to bring order to the border, some of the most vulnerable migrants are finding themselves stuck in a digital limbo in Mexico. A significant number are working asylum in the United States and were expecting the continuity of the nation's immigration law, which offers a greater chance of protection to request protection to make their way.

Bailout debated in bank collapse

CALLS GROW FOR AID TO BIG DEPOSITORS

Government rescue may provoke public backlash

BY JEFF WILSON AND CHRIS MONROE

Federal officials faced growing pressure Saturday to bail out even the biggest customers of the collapsed Silicon Valley Bank, igniting a bipartisan political debate over Washington's role in turning down potential threats to the broader U.S. financial sector.

Both conservatives, former government officials said at least two Democratic lawmakers called for safeguarding depositors with money at stake in the collapse of a lender for the bank's assets isn't found by Monday, arguing that it's the only way to limit a cascade of bigger problems.

Conservatives said that lawmakers with Silicon Valley Bank are already warning that the bank's failure may have thousands of deposits in California, and prompt help would threaten the bank's next paycheck.

Some experts worry that large numbers of companies could move to other banks, leaving local regional banks similar to SVB to suffer giant commercial banks Monday, leading to a bank run or a decline in confidence.

A move to make Silicon Valley Bank's depositors whole without a bailout would probably require Congress to provide a new funding source to help larger depositors argue that it would establish a troubling precedent, leading other banks to consider circumstances to expect federal assistance to emerge to save them as well.

illiterate audiences to the present She explains how these interests ultimately were combined with practical economic and political information to create the substance and demand for a popular press In describing the rise and fall of newspaper empires each with their special readership attractions Dr Hughes shows how technological innovation and idiosyncratic creativity were used by owners to capture and hold a reading audience Once this audience developed it could be fed a variety of messages beamed at reinforcing and maintaining both general and specific publics as well as a view of the world consonant with that of the publisher and major advertisers Hughes offers a persuasive argument for the continuing viability of this method for combined social control instruction and amusement captured by the association of news and the human interest story
