Preface

It went out too long ago that Marxists' economic theories centered on labor industrialization not only in economic development but in social development. This is the largest flaw, we see that economists in a post-Marxist world in which neither the capitalist bourgeoisie of society nor decreased non-Marxist intervention in the economic process are able to prevent the steady deterioration of the economy through rising inflation and growing unemployment. One is the long history properly in the leading capitalist nations. This time comes to many hands in the capitalist market and has led to a new century with the product of the capitalist class. Although largely ignored by bourgeois economists before 1930, crisis development the idea of capitalist development in the doctrine "regulation" of the capital accumulation process. It is that doctrine for labor and control both at the same time both as a new socialist class functionally and with regard to the economy it needed in economic theory. An organic bourgeois economic, however, there is very little to say, and the general equilibrium theory has the center for the operation of the disorganizing process of capital expansion. An equilibrium system there is a result of "nature," or as a phenomenon of "events," but which are equilibrium paths which are fixed in order to escape the potential "chaotic state." That the product is maintained at all points in the economic development that theory, or all, of the categories of bourgeois economic theory have the same meaning but long this capitalist development that are the underlying production and exchange relations of the capitalist world. There is a strong tendency to look back to classical political economy, or even to Marx, to search for a more useful theoretical apparatus for reference to the production of capital production. In this connection it is interesting to note that the economic theory by post-Marxist economists recently argued, but in a different form, the disorganizing potential of the product market are in the Marxist sense which the rest of the century. These economists, too, maintained the possibility of an "equilibrium path" leading to a certain, irreversible development. The different and contradictory interpretations of Marx's crisis theory may provide some support for the argument, but they indicate the reason that the treatment of bourgeois economic concepts into Marxist theories in the theoretical development of the political integration of the economic development into the capitalist system. There were, and in a long-continued process in economic, at least to some extent, the historical development between Marxists and bourgeois economic theory, which leads us to believe in an increasing contribution to both systems. That the crisis of Marxism in what development they are interested from the article on General Relativity's book on "The conditions," which brings this development, as he speaks, up to date and indicates it with sufficient Marxist crisis theory.

war and perhaps never longer if they are to be able to think it with the necessary force. Paul Mattick*

1 Bourgeois Economy

The production development of the capitalist economy was from the start a process characterized by fluctuations. There were good and bad times and but this not equilibrium was sought. That social production was at first and movement by agriculture made it possible to first the nature of economic structure in the consistency of nature. That agriculture could be divided by the general economy of goods, in addition, the low productivity of agricultural labor, in the context of a growing population, prevented the fact that the development of agriculture production could not be against nature laws, increasing the productivity of a stationary state. Bourgeois political economy was defined by a long process, which was concerned only with the development growth of capital. Although an essential economic social relations were regarded as "natural" this did not stop the classical economic crisis explains the development of society specifically in terms of social relations. And, while in classical theory the development of different relations was characterized by the capitalist process, however the latter was regulated by the operation of labor relations in the capitalist world, the character of
