Giant Multipole Resonances Tenn.) Giant Multipole Resonance Topical Conference (1979 : Oak Ridge, 1980 Giant Multipole Resonances , 1980 Nearly ten years ago evidence was published for the first of the so called giant multipole resonances the giant quadrupole resonance During the ensuing years research in this field has spread to many nuclear physics laboratories throughout the world The present status of electric giant multipole resonances is reviewed 24 figures 1 table Studies of Giant Multipole Resonances with Intermediate Energy Heavy Ions , 1989 The role of intermediate energy heavy ions in the study of giant multipole resonances is explored with emphasis on gamma decay coincidence experiments Experiments on ^{208}Pb bombarded by 22 MeV nucleon and 84 MeV nucleon ^{17}O are discussed and compared The role of Coulomb excitation in the 84 MeV nucleon data is emphasized and some consequences for study of isovector resonance strength are explored A comparison of the excitation and decay of the isovector giant dipole resonance in ^{208}Pb and ^{209}Bi excited with 84 MeV nucleon ^{17}O scattering is presented 19 refs 15 figs 1 tab Excitation and Photon Decay of Giant Multipole Resonances - the Role and Future of Medium-energy Heavy Ions , 1988 Inelastic scattering of medium energy heavy ions provides very large cross sections and peak to continuum ratios for excitation of giant resonances For energies above about 50 MeV nucleon giant resonances are excited primarily through Coulomb excitation which is indifferent to isospin thus providing a good probe for the study of isovector giant resonances The extremely large cross sections available from heavy ion excitation permit the study of rare decay modes of the photon decay of giant resonances following excitation by 22 and 84 MeV nucleon ^{17}O projectiles The singles results at 84 MeV nucleon yield peak cross sections for the isoscalar giant quadrupole resonance and the isovector giant dipole resonance of approximately 0.8 and 3 barns sr respectively Data on the ground state decay of the isoscalar giant quadrupole and isovector giant dipole resonances are presented and compared with calculations Decays to low lying excited states are also discussed Preliminary results from an experiment to isolate the ^{208}Pb isovector quadrupole resonance using its gamma decay are presented Giant Resonances , 1989 A review of some recent developments in the field of giant multipole resonances is presented Particular emphasis is placed on directions that the authors feel will be followed in this field during the next several years In particular the use of high energy heavy ions to excite the giant resonances is shown to provide exciting new capabilities for giant resonance studies Among subjects covered are Coulomb excitation of giant resonances photon decay of giant resonances the recent controversy over the identity of the giant monopole resonance the most recent value for incompressibility of nuclear matter from analysis of giant monopole data the isospin character of the ^{63}A sup minus 1.3 GQR agreement between e, e' and hadron hadron prime excitation of the giant quadrupole resonance prospects for multiphonon giant resonance observation and isolation of the isovector giant quadrupole resonance 55 refs 23 figs 4 tabs Heavy Ion Excitation and Photon

Decay of Giant Resonances, 1983 Results are presented for excitation of giant multipole resonances by inelastic scattering of 350 and 500 MeV ^{16}O projectiles from ^9Zr and ^{208}Pb . The giant quadrupole resonance is excited with large cross sections and a very large resonance peak to continuum ratio is obtained. Extracted cross sections agree with DWBA calculations which use standard collective model form factors. Using 380 MeV ^{17}O to excite the giant resonances the gamma ray decay has been measured for the giant quadrupole resonance region of ^{208}Pb . 10 references.

Excitation of Giant Resonances Via Direct Reactions, 1982 Experimental measurements of electric giant multipole resonances are discussed. The parameters of the giant quadrupole resonance are now firmly established by an extensive set of measurements. The GQR is providing a significant influence in other areas of nuclear physics. The monopole resonance has now been established and its observation has provided the first direct measure of the nuclear compressibility. A strong case for the existence of a giant octupole resonance is now being made through a variety of hadron reactions. However the supply of giant multipole resonances has not been exhausted. The newer techniques such as higher energy proton scattering, charge exchange reactions, heavy ion scattering and pion reactions offer considerable hope for identifying new resonances during the next few years.
