

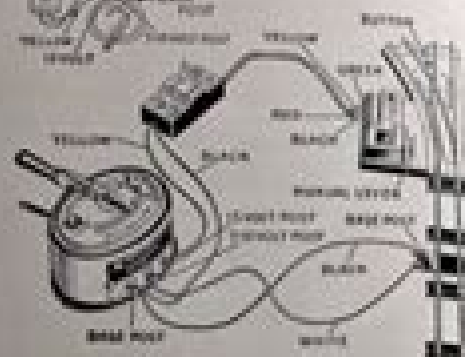

Fig. 19

When the switches are used for two train operation they MUST be operated in pairs, that is, they must both be set for the same loop, except in the case of spur lines where the end of the track is not connected to any part of the layout.

Use the Control Box levers to throw the switch frogs, do not throw them with the manual lever unless frog should stop in a center position or not close properly, then use the manual lever to throw frog all the way over. Best performance will be obtained if trains are run through switches at a medium rate of speed.

To change lamp bulbs, remove the two screws on lamp housing and replace lamp with a $1\frac{1}{2}$ G-14 Volt lamp, No. 411.

The No. 1228 Manual Control switch is used the same way as the No. 1224 Remote Control switch with the exception that it operates with a manual lever instead of electricity, and is not lighted. Now, there are no wires to hook up.

THE USE OF THE NO. 697 TRACK TRIP FOR THROWING TRACK SWITCHES AUTOMATICALLY

Switches can be thrown automatically by the locomotive so that there is no chance of running into a switch which has been thrown against the oncoming train and causing a derailment. This is accomplished by hooking the trip as shown in Fig. 20.

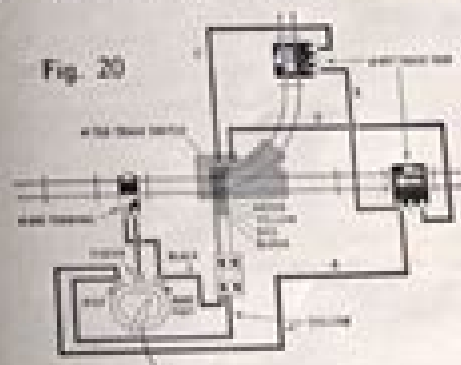

Place a No. 697 Trip ahead of the switch on both the curved and straight sections. Keep the trip about two sections of track from the switch. Hook the control lead to the switches as instructed.

Next hook wire "A" from clip 1 on the one track trip to the 12 VOLT POINT on the transformer.

Connect the 2 No. 1 clips on track trip with wire "B".

Connect wire "C" from the No. 1 clip on the track trip which is on the curved rail to the RED post on the track switch.

Connect wire "D" from the No. 1 clip on the track trip which is on the straight rail to the GREEN post on the track switch.

Adjust the trip so only the locomotive will activate it, then when the train approaches the switch and it is set against it, the trip will automatically cause the frog to throw open and the train will pass through without derailing.
