

CHAPTER 15

EVOLUTION OF NIGERIA AS A POLITICAL UNIT

Epelle Alafuro

Introduction

It may be necessary to start this chapter by emphasizing that the Nigerian State as we know it today with its distinct geo-political identity is a product of British colonial imperialism of the mid nineteenth century. This must not however be taken literally to mean that the different ethnic groups that were forced to coalesce into what we have today as Nigeria had no pattern of socio-political arrangement that met their needs, because however elementary those arrangements had seemed in the eyes of a cursory observer they exhibited all the characteristics of any other organized political society of the time (Nwabueze 1982:2). This clarification has become necessary due to the obviously jaundiced knowledge peddled by some European scholars that black people, prior to colonial rule, had no history or principles of conduct. For instance, while Professor Hugh Trevor-Roper had been quoted as saying that, "perhaps in the future there will be some African history to teach. But at present there is none..." (quoted in Crowder, 1968:10), others more "benign" than him concede that though there may have been some periods of significant studies in African history, yet such leaps in history are the effort of the Hermits, a branch of the white race who they hypothesize had visited the African continent in an earlier period. This wry logic summarized under the Hamitic hypothesis did not believe that the great kingdoms, empires, civilizations and distinct administrative paraphernalia found in the continent at the threshold of colonial imperialism were endogenously evolved. To Seligman and his European disciples who espouse this Hamitic view, pre-colonial Africans were not capable of any rational thought of their own (Osagie 2002:1-2).

Consequently, in this section we will attempt to prove that Africans, Nigerian inclusive, had a glorious past just like the Europeans and the Americans, thus confirming the argument by Afrophiles that the underdevelopment which Africa faces today was not only because she was technological inferior to the former as at the onset of colonialism in the nineteenth century (Crowder 1968:4-5), but also because of the debilitating trans-Atlantic slave trade. According to Osagie (2002:2), this inhuman trade which lasted for more than three centuries greatly destabilized the African continent as able bodied men and women who were contributing to the well-being of their different nations were carted away to the Americas (Epelle, 2010:3).

Though Nigeria prior to colonial rule has been recorded as having about 250 ethnic groups (Nwabueze 1982:9-10; Epelle, 2010:15) each with its distinct cultural identity, yet scholars have argued that beneath this seeming cultural diversity lies some common attributes especially in the area of political administration where two main types have been distinguished, the centralized and the non-centralized political systems (Igwe 2003:20).

African Traditional Political Thought and Institutions Zaccheus Sunday Ali,John A. A. Ayoade,Adigun A. B. Agbaje,1989 Muslim Civic Cultures and Conflict Resolution John N. Paden,2006-03-30 The question of whether Islam is compatible with democracy may best be answered not from the classical sources or even from the cauldron of Middle East politics but from the lived experiences of Muslim communities around the world In large and diverse countries the varied political values of different cultures can make or break the democratic experiment Regardless of their cultural context transitions from military to civilian rule require attention to the grassroots civic cultures that form the foundations of democratic federalism John Paden a noted expert on West African and Islamic societies uses Nigeria as a critical case study of how a diverse country with a significant Muslim population is working to make the transition to a democratic society Although little studied the non Arab Muslim communities of West Africa are an important indicator as to whether Islamic democracy in a diverse nation is possible Nigeria s success is vital to regional and global stability As the largest country in Africa with a population that is about half Muslim and half Christian or traditional animist Nigeria is also the seventh largest producer of oil in the world and has gone through a series of political traumas ranging from civil war to military rule The current democratic government is trying to balance rule of law concerns at a time when many communal tensions are coming to the surface Muslim Civic Cultures and Conflict Resolution in Nigeria takes us inside the complex world of Nigerian politics with a focus on the ways Muslim civic cultures deal with matters of leadership and conflict resolution The book provides an essential context to the current international concern with issues ranging from Shari a law and communal violence to the broader war on terrorism It argues that the requirement for regional political cooperation serves as a counterbalance to more extreme forms of political expression Paden shows that if the Nigerian political model o
