Consumer Choice in Historical Archaeology S.M. SpencerWood,2013-06-29 Historical archaeology has made great strides during the last two decades Early archaeological reports were dominated by descriptions of features and artifacts while research on artifacts was concentrated on studies of topology technology and chronology Site reports from the 1960s and 1970s commonly expressed faith in the potential artifacts had for aiding in the identifying socioeconomic status differences and for understanding the relationships between the social classes in terms of their material culture An emphasis was placed on the presence or absence of porcelain or teaware as an indication of social status These were typical features in site reports written just a few years ago During this same period advances were being made in the study of food bone as archaeologists moved away from bone counts to minimal animal counts and then on to the costs of various cuts of meat Within the last five years our ability to address questions of the relationship between material culture and socioeconomic status has greatly expanded The essays in this volume present efforts toward measuring expenditure and consumption patterns represented by commonly recovered artifacts and food bone These patterns of consumption are examined in conjunction with evidence from documentary sources that provide information on occupations wealth levels and ethnic affiliations of those that did the consuming One of the refreshing aspects of these papers is that the authors are not afraid of documents and their use of them is not limited to a role of confirmation

The Oxford Handbook of the Archaeology of Childhood Sally Elizabeth Ellen Crawford, Dawn M. Hadley, Gillian B. Shepherd, 2018 In this volume experts from around the world investigate childhood in the past showing why it is important to understand childhood why different cultures construct different ideas of how to rear children what part children play in the community and when and why childhood ends

Archaeology and Capitalism Yannis Hamilakis, Philip Duke, 2016-06-03 The contributors to this volume focus on the inherent political nature of archaeology and its relationship to power and explore how archaeologists can become more overtly agents of social change for individuals and communities

The Archaeology of Contemporary America William R. Caraher, 2024-03-05 This book provides a survey of contemporary archaeology in the United States demonstrating the plurality of theoretical and methodological approaches that make this discipline in the US unique

The Presented Past B. L. Molyneaux, P. G. Stone, 2003-09-02 The Presented Past is concerned with the differences between the comparatively static well understood way in which the past is presented in schools museums and at historic sites compared to the approaches currently being explored in contemporary archaeology It challenges the all too frequent representation of the past as something finished understood and objective rather than something that is constructed and therefore open to co existing interpretations and constant re interpretation Central to the book is the belief that the presentation of the past in school curricula and in museum and site interpretations will benefit from a greater use of non documentary sources derived from archaeological study and oral histories The book suggests that a view of the past incorporating a larger body of evidence and a wider variety of understanding will help to invigorate the way history is taught The Presented Past will be of interest to teachers archaeologists cultural resource managers in fact anyone who is concerned with how the past is presented
