Property Rights and Economic Development Toon van Meijl, Franz von Benda-Beckham, 2012-11-12 First Published in 1999 This book provides a critical analysis of the widespread assumption that the formalisation and standardisation of property rights through state legislation has a positive impact on economic development It is based on anthropological case studies of land and natural resource rights in Southeast Asia and Oceania These suggest that the economic impact of the formalisation of property rights is not necessarily positive certainly not for all categories of peoples They also suggest that state reform of property rights do not necessarily eliminate the conditions of legal pluralism but rather add new legal structures to an already complex constellation of property rights and duties The point of departure for the empirical analyses of the central hypothesis examined in this book is that the practical significance of complex forms of property rights and related socio economic practices cannot be usefully examined within formalistic one dimensional and normatively oriented legalistic or economic approaches Instead an anthropological approach to law is advocated in order to analyse the complicated multi dimensional relationships between property rights and economic development and their embeddedness in social practice Based on this approach the contributions to this book show how different people and institutions attribute different meanings to the various components of property relationships and how they use them as resources in their everyday lives and social struggles
