Resnick, Danielle, Mason, Nicole, M., 2016-11-24 When and why do suboptimal agricultural policies persist despite technical evidence highlighting alternatives And what explains episodes of reform after prolonged periods of policy inertia This paper addresses these questions by applying the Kaleidoscope Model for agricultural and food security policy change to the specific case of agricultural input policy in Zambia Since 2002 the Farmer Input Support Program formerly the Fertilizer Support Program has been a cornerstone of Zambia's agricultural policy Over the years however many researchers have highlighted weaknesses in the program and proposed other options Based on semistructured interviews with key stakeholders and intensive process tracing using media donor parliamentary and research reports this paper examines how the program initially began in 2002 and during subsequent periods of reform in 2009 and 2015 Based on the findings here periods of reform for input support programs are most likely when there is a confluence of multiple factors These include the emergence of a window of opportunity in the form of either a focusing event for example a food crisis or an institutional shift for example a new president or new ruling party that coincides with broad stakeholder support for empirically grounded alternatives available material resources and sustained commitment from politically important policy makers

Agricultural Producer Subsidies David Amaglobeli, Todd Benson, Ms. Tewodaj Mogues, 2024-08-26 The objectives underlying agricultural output subsidies can have conflicting implications for the design of subsidy programs As they tend to affect meaningful swaths of the electorate subsidies can also be an attractive political instrument By artificially lowering production costs or assuring higher output prices direct support measures can result in resource misallocation in instances where they fail to address market failures such as imperfect information about the returns to fertilizers Subsidies can also contribute to fertilizer overuse harming the environment and the agricultural sector in the long term Furthermore agricultural production subsidies are often fiscally costly and unfavorable compared to alternative uses of public funds both within the agricultural sector and outside it to achieve the same ends Various design and implementation challenges amplify the shortcomings of producer subsidy programs
