

Funeral Food, Rituals, and Customs from Around the World

"WHEN YOU'RE SHARING A MEAL after a funeral, you're really poking a thumb in the eye of death. After all, with the simple act of eating, you're assuming that you're going to need the fuel for the future you expect you're going to have, unlike the poor body in the box whose death is the purpose for the get-together. You can ask any caterer: most people eat a lot more food at funerals than at weddings. And that cuts across all cultures."

— from the Introduction

"LISA ROGAK'S recipe-enriched approach to funeral customs around the world reminds us that these rites are for the living. Digging into her slow-cooked jambalaya dish meant to be served after a New Orleans jazz funeral would make anyone feel happy to be alive."
