

- I. Introduction to the Psychology of Time

- Time is both an objective reality, as well as a subjective psychological construct

- Time could be defined as the physical measurement of motion (ie, the measurement of the motion of the earth around the sun),

- Time is also a psychological construct

- Examples:

- “A watched pot never boils” = the seeming prolongation of less enjoyable experiences

- “Time flies when you’re having fun” is indicative of the psychological phenomenon whereby perception of time is directly proportional to our perceived level of enjoyment in the present task.
