Zobel, Johannes P. van Buijtenen, 2012-12-06 Wood is the usual end product of a forestry operation Because of its importance numerous studies have been made relative to wood prop erties the causes of wood variation and how best to develop wood for desired products There is voluminous literature related to these subjects but it is neither well known nor appreciated by foresters because the publications are often not available or are not well understood by the forester or by those who use the wood Frequently the literature is confusing and contradictory making it difficult for the nonspecialist to use what information is available In order to produce and use wood efficiently the variation pat terns within trees among trees within species and among species must be understood This also requires some knowledge of the causes of variation and the effects of different wood properties upon utiliza tion The information about variation patterns their causes and con trol and effect upon the product must be known by the tree grower the tree breeder and the tree harvester as well as by those who ultimately convert wood into a final salable product      European Forest Sector Outlook Study 1960-2000-2020 United Nations. #### Politics of Forests Jakob

Donner-Amnell, 2017-03-02 Bringing together case studies from Canada the Nordic countries and Russia this book is the first to provide a comparative examination of the current transformations in the forest industry regimes and the challenges they make for the communities dependent on this industry Questioning how globalization has influenced forest regimes the book focuses on individual forest companies and argues that they are the main motors of the industry's internationalization often without taking due consideration of the complex interrelations between society the environment and forest trade During the current phase of globalization the sphere of material production within the forest industry has increasingly been modified by more speculative signals from the market Both the growing role of investor interests as well as the broader societal demands for greening the production chain have forced managers to be more sensitive to the performance profile and image of their companies In conclusion the book highlights instances of processes working towards homogenization and diversity and suggests that while Anglo American management practice is increasingly important across the northern forest regions it is also meeting with resistance due to historical and political conditions
