Abstract

In most developing countries, the large size of the shadow economy is often attributed to ineffective macroeconomic policies, particularly fiscal policy. Additionally, any empirical analysis of the shadow economy, as well as policy recommendations that disregard the role of fiscal policy, would be incomplete and potentially misleading. Therefore, this present study empirically examines the impact of fiscal policy on the shadow economy in developing countries. Utilizing an annual panel dataset spanning 127 selected developing countries from 2002 to 2018, the study employs panel data estimation methods including fixed effects and system GMM. Overall, the study reveals that expansionary fiscal policy tends to reduce the size of the shadow economy, whereas contractionary fiscal policy increases it. Specifically, tax revenue contributes to the growth of the shadow economy, while government expenditure reduces its size. Furthermore, the study identifies a stronger impact of tax revenue compared to government expenditure on the shadow economy. The findings of this study imply that governments in developing countries can influence the size of the shadow economy through expansionary fiscal policies, with a particular emphasis on the structure of taxation. However, the effective utilization of government spending also proves to be a viable strategy for controlling the size of the shadow economy.

Barnes,Kerry Krutilla,William F. Hyde,2010-09-30 As cities in developing countries grow and become more prosperous energy use shifts from fuelwood to fuels like charcoal kerosene and coal and ultimately to fuels such as liquid petroleum gas and electricity Energy use is not usually considered as a social issue Yet as this book demonstrates the movement away from traditional fuels has a strong socio economic dimension as poor people are the last to attain the benefits of using modern energy The result is that health risks from the continued use of wood fuel fall most heavily on the poor and indoor pollution from wood stoves has its greatest effect on women and children who cook and spend much more of their time indoors Barnes Krutilla and Hyde provide the first worldwide assessment of the energy transition as it occurs in urban households drawing upon data collected by the World Bank Energy Sector Management Assistance Programme ESMAP From 1984 2000 the program conducted over 25 000 household energy surveys in 45 cities spanning 12 countries and 3 continents Additionally GIS mapping software was used to compile a biomass database of vegetation patterns surrounding 34 cities Using this rich set of geographic biological and socioeconomic data the authors describe problems and policy options associated with each stage in the energy transition The authors show how the poorest are most vulnerable to changes in energy markets and demonstrate how the collection of biomass fuel contributes to deforestation Their book serves as an important contribution to development studies and as a guide for policymakers hoping to encourage sustainable energy markets and an improved quality of life for growing urban populations Bibliography of Published Research of the World Employment Programme International Labour Office,1991

Taxation and Pricing of Petroleum Products in Developing Countries

Mr.Shahabuddin Mosherraf Hossain,2003-02-01 Using the modern theory of public economics as the point of departure this paper outlines a basic principle for setting taxes and or prices of commodities based on two key criteria efficiency and equity The paper shows that for petroleum products the basic principle needs modification in the presence of various externalities and market imperfections in a setting where the instruments to address the externalities and imperfections are limited Drawing from theoretical and empirical literature the paper provides an operational framework and then illustrates how for a country like Nigeria the relevant taxes subsidies to correct the externalities and to address equity and revenue considerations can be measured with a view to setting prices of petroleum products However the paper refrains from making any specific suggestion for policy reform in Nigeria The framework outlined in the paper can be applied to the analysis of petroleum product taxes and prices in other developing countries

Protected Areas and Indigeneous Communities Azra Musavi,2015-09-08 This book deals with protected area people interface in Bori Wildlife Sanctuary and Melghat Tiger Reserve located in Satpura range of Central Indian Highlands These forests are mostly inhabited by Gond Koru and Thatia tribes a small population of agro pastoral community and other backward classes which have moved into these forests from adjoining areas in search of pastures for their large herds of livestock Bori in northern Satpura has moist deciduous forest while Melghat in southern Satpura hills has dry deciduous forest Both protected areas are renowned for tigers as well as for a rich faunal and floral diversity These forests are under increasing anthropogenic pressure due to people living in and around the two protected areas The book looks at three aspects which are a challenge for protected area management One it explores the web of both tribal and non tribal life as the intervention of market economy and increasing population have led to change in the basis of the local subsistence economy Secondly it tries to assess the extent of impact of biotic dependence on the forests of both protected areas Thirdly and most importantly it examines the park people conflicts and their implications for
